—A young lady had been trying for three weeks to get a photograph of her pet poodle, but the fidgety little animal would not be taken. So she just had the artist take the photograph of her nicest young man, whitening the moustache and painting the ears up a little, and the resemblance is so perfect that the innocent young man himself admired it, and begged for a copy as "a soovner of the s'gacious an'mal."

—Barnum's portrait is painted on a part of his cages. When his show was in Hartford, the other day, an honest-minded chap was looking about the camp as the workmen were packing up. Seeing Barnum's full face on the side of the cage of the stuffed hippopotamus, he asked the man in charge if Barnum was in there.

"Yes," was the reply, and the door was partly opened.

The stranger peeped in, and exclaimed: "Oh, la! Is that him! He is fatter than I supposed, and is of darker color."

The door was shut suddenly.
