The Catholic Record.

"Christianus mihi nomen est Catholicus vero Cognomen."—Christian is my Name but Catholic my Surname.—St. Paulin. an Century

VOLUME XXXIII. LONDON, ONTARIO, SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1911 1693

The Catholic Record

London, Saturday, April 1, 1911

ON GUARD

The late Mr. Barnum was a firm believer in the credulity of the public. But this generation is not so prone to be deceived by humbug, especially when it shows the signs of go. Time was when talk about patriotism found ready hearers, and when any politician with a few platitudes about the old flag was acclaimed by the easy. Yes, however, have learned that patriotic talk may be but mere and futile and that the glowing themes may be anything but a patriot. When a man, for instance, does not respect the dignity of the human nature we are not attracted by the show of his patriotic effusions. He may be late to his work and faithless to his obligations as a husband or father cannot be a good patriot. Extolling the progress of greatness and material wealth is worthless with the right ring only when it is associated with the attention that tells not the right kind of men. The active men should be interested in the welfare and education of public schools and should be competent to act and not imperative to do so.

WHAT IS IT

Some persons say, when we refer to the disadvantages under the Catholic population under the British crown, that we should not be so glad to see the glorious figure. But to be free from an oppressive foreign government is not to make a free people. We do not want to make a people free from the tyranny of the people. We want to make a people free from the tyranny of the people. We want to make a people free from the tyranny of the people. We