Verses on Charleston Lake.

Some poets write of heroes

And others write of kings;

Some will write of love affairs

And the pleasure which I take While looking at the scenery

Our levely lake is studded round

And many a curious rent is seen, Caused by convulsive shock;

And there are many pleasant bays Where pleasure you can take,

In angling for the rinny tribes

Our lake is called Charleston;

It's length is seven miles;

Its width you cannot well find out--

In city or in town,
While standing on the mountain Blue

There are so many isies.
But still there is a beauty
That all these isles doth make,

To a lover of sublimity, While sailing on the lake.

The sight of such a landscape

The beauties of the lake.

You see those island hills

Dotted o'er the watery plain,

Among the rippling rills.

You're mesmerized with wonder But when again you wake,

You know that nothing can surpass The beauties of the lake.

You next take note of Charleston.
