Gilroy is around in his usual health again. Horse trotting every night at Forth-ton. Out with your bloods, boys, and see what you can do. A few days ago the ex-president of the Bell Farm was noticed hastening hither and thither very early in the morning. As this is a very unusual trait of his, the neighbors all wondered what was up, as they knew that the serene calm of a June evening was not more placid than the habits and tem-per of the genial resident of Burdock Alfey. A conclave of the initiated was held in the front parlor of the Fair House and a deputation appointed to nose around and quietly find out the cause of trouble. One of the commit-te was fortunate enough to interview the ex-president shortly after, and learned that all the excitement and trips to and fro was caused by the sudden disappearance of the brindled boyine which for years has quietly nib-bled the succulent grasses of the long pasture, and had always until the pres-ent, been found within a reasonable dis-tance of the owner hed come to the condu-Mr. W.
