MISCELLANEOUS.

"The structure of the tooth," said the lecturer on dentistry, "is arranged in sections. The outer wall has feeling, but it is not so highly sensitive that it will convey the sensation of pain. It is not until we attack the interior layers that we reach the truly sensitive portion of the tooth, and even then it is at times difficult to tell when our instruments have pierced the nerve-centre. However there is one infallible rule."

"And what is that, professor?" asked a close listener. "How may we tell when we are inflicting pain?" "The patient jumps,"—Judge.

MESSRS C. C. RICHARDS & CO.,
Gentlemen,—Last winter I received great benefit from the use of MINARD'S LINIMENT in a severe attack of La Grippe, and I have frequently proved it to be very effective in cases of inflammation.

Hospitals in London.

Mr. Blackshaw gives some interesting statistics about hospitals in London, as follows: "For the last thirty years, St. Thomas Hospital, across Westminster Bridge, has been housed in a row of large detached red-brick buildings, which with the ground they stand on, cost $2,500,000. The governors received in 1902 a legacy of rather more than that amount. But such prosperity is rare among the hospitals of London. For years past almost all of them have been clamoring for money for rebuilding and other purposes. Even St. Bartholomew's has become as lusty a beggar as the rest. This ancient foundation, dating from 1123, is ninety years older than the venerable St. Thomas's and until the latter came into its recent legacy had a larger income. But having bought some of the Christ's Hospital land, adjoining its own five acres, to build on, it appealed to the public in 1903, with the Lord Mayor's backing, for $1,500,000, and hinted at an appeal for a similar amount later on. At first, this encountered opposition, as it anticipated the quinquennial appeal of 'Bar's' great rival, the London Hospital, in Whitechapel Road. It was from the London that the surgeon (Sir Frederick Treves) and the trained nurse came who saved the King in 1902; and in June, 1903, his Majesty opened a new out-patients' department there, which had cost $400,000 in erecting and equipping other buildings over $600,000 had been spent, and $850,000 more is in the course of disbursement. At Charing Cross Hospital, near Trafalgar Square, $500,000 is being spent on handsome new buildings. The same amount has been expended within the last few years on the Middlesex Hospital in Mortimer street. For the new home of the University College Hospital in Gower street, the late Sir J. Blundell Maple made himself responsible to the extent of $1,000,000. King's Hospital is to migrate from Portugal street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, to a twelve-acre site recently presented to it in South London, and the public is asked to pay the bill ($1,500,000). At the same time, St. George's Hospital, Hyde Park Corner, is looking about for a new site in its present neighborhood. At Guy's Hospital a new nurses' home has been built for $340,000 and $600,000 is requested for other buildings—to say nothing of an endowment to yield $70,000 a year. On a part of the Millbank Prison site, near the Tate Gallery military hospital worth $600,000 is going up. This is by no means a full account of what is being done to provide for London's ailing poor, but it gives some notion of the magnitude of the work. The maintenance of these great charities, save only the few that are supported

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.
Randall Blackshaw, writing on "London in Transformation," with pictures by Birch B. Long, in the January Century, mentions the new Westminster Cathedral, designed by the late gifted architect, Mr. John F. Bentley. A full page illustration is given of the strange Byzantine building with its one high, square, domed tower rising loftily above it. "The chief new place of worship, Westminster Cathedral, has no connection with the Establishment, but is the headquarters of Roman Catholicism in England. The tower of this vast edifice is conspicuous enough, though its body is hidden away 'behind the shops and mansions' of Victoria street. It lies not more than half a mile from Westminster Abbey, and within a stone's throw of the American embassy; and now that it is so nearly finished as to be in use it has become one of the sights to be seen by travelers. Though shorter than the Abbey, it is both wider and higher, and its single tapering tower rises well above those of the older shrine. Its many domes and the gaiety of its exterior—red brick striped with white stone—distinguish it at a glance from the churches and Cathedrals of Protestant England. Its designer, Mr. Bentley, owes his inspiration, in fact, to a careful study of the early Byzantine type of ecclesiastical architecture. As to the appropriateness of this type in England, opinions may well differ; yet however incongruous the outside of the building may be with its immediate surroundings and the smoky skies above it, there can be no doubt as to the dignity and impressiveness of its interior. As yet, the great building is unconsecrated; and in accordance with Catholic usage, will remain so till it is free from debt. Its estimated cost is $5,000,000."

Says the Western Watchman: "Congress will not admit New Mexico into the Union because the people of that territory in times of drought have a habit of praying for rain. When Utah knocked for admission, the fact that half the men of the territory were living in beastly concubinage did not offer any obstacle."

The editor of the Catholic Union and Times believes with President Roosevelt that corporal punishment should be dealt out to the brutes in human form who beat their wives and little children and other helpless human beings. "Such low-browed ruffians," declares our strenuous conferee, "deserve to be oiled like wild beasts and scorged to within an inch of their lives."

"The result of the strike to the city of Fall River can hardly be realized," says the Providence Visitor. "The city has been gradually depopulated of many of its most sturdy citizens, who have gone to live under brighter skies. Business is at a standstill; and prosperous merchants are each day fearing that their stores and houses will eventually come under the hammer. Where is it all going to end? Can the starving people hold out forever? Can the city recover from the terrible crisis which has brought it to the verge of despair? Time alone will tell; though we fear, from the present outlook, that the time is far off."

The Northwest Review has the following sensible words on a topic of much importance: "Some parents derive an illusory consolation from the fact that their boys and girls read a great deal. They may not be brilliant at school, but they are always reading at home. This might be a real advantage if what they read was useful. But most of the time they are reading as a mental soporific. As Lord Rosebery recently pointed out in an address at the People's Hall, Midlothian, 'many excellent people spend all their days in reading, and are of no use to themselves or anybody else.' In their case reading is a disease which saps all their mental vigor. Children should be directed in the choice of books, and frequently called upon to summarize what they have read, and talk it over."

Parents, if you neglect to teach your daughters domestic work; if you fail to impress upon them that when marriage calls a girl to a high and holy state of life and motherhood, if they are ignorant of household duties, their existence and the peace of home will be imperiled," declares the Michigan Catholic.

"A young girl contemplating marriage owes it as a duty to herself, and to her husband and offspring, that she should understand the practical care of a home. Unfortunately there are too many young girls who give heedless thought to domestic work, and who could not boil water without supervision. There will be no domestic bliss, no peace, no harmony in married life when a woman is ignorant of household duties. Learn all you can from mother, girls. When the 'old folks' sleep in the City of the Dead, and the home is broken up, if you have made preparation, the struggle for life will be easy."

"We recently," says the editor of the Pittsburg Catholic, "sat near a man who in conversation with his companion interlarded his sentences with a most blasphemous expression, the profane use of the Sacred Name, before which the angels in heaven and the devils in hell bow. This man would have decal himself insulted if told he was not a gentleman. And let it be confessed in an inexpressible shame that in religion he called himself a Catholic. A man may steal to satisfy his hunger. A liar may hope to gain by deceiving another. A drunkard or a glutton satisfies his appetite. But what profit or gratification can there be in swearing? Is a man wiser, more brave, more of a gentleman, more to be believed, or to be trusted, or is he more of a man because he swears? An old writer said: 'Most sinners serve the devil for pay, but swearers serve him gratis, whom he rewards by dragging down to hell.'"

The deaths are announced of the Rev. P. A. Kelly, C. C., Sarnanhill, Athlone, and of the Rev. T. Cassidy, P. P., Longwood, County Meath, Ireland.

Fifty thousand of the residents of Manila, Philippine Islands, made pilgrimages to the various churches of the city on the feast of the Immaculate Conception.

There is talk in Alabama of raising a memorial to the Rev. Abner J. Ryan, author of "The Conquered Banner" and other lyrics of Confederate patriotism.

From Tokio it is announced that Hannah, daughter of Viscount Aki, formerly Japanese Minister in Berlin, and Count Alexander von Hatzfeld, attaché at the German Legation in Tokio, were married here recently at the Catholic Cathedral, in presence of a very large congregation.

In the course of a letter read at the D. member meeting of the Order of the Most Holy Redeemer, president of Mynooth, says the study of Irish has been made compulsory for all students during the first two years of their course in the college.

Preparations are being made for the celebration on July 7, 1905, of the hundredth anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone of the Baltimore Cathedral. It is expected that many distinguished ecclesiastics will be present, and that the event will prove second in importance only to the laying of the corner-stone itself.

Last October at Johannesburg, five Sisters of Nazareth, of Nazareth House, that city, received medals from Lord Roberts in recognition of their services to the sick and wounded during the late war. As the Sisters advanced towards the place where Lord Roberts was seated with Lady Roberts, the Mayor of Johannesburg, and others, the applause from the thousands assembled was beyond description.

The death in England of Father Bertrand Wilberforce, of the Order of Preachers, who would have completed his sixty-fifth year next March, removes a much respected member of a notable family, closely associated both with the early High Church movement in England and with the influx of distinguished converts into the Catholic Church which was the direct result of that movement. The deceased priest was the eldest of the three sons of Henry Wilberforce, himself the young son of William Wilberforce, the eminent philanthropist, whose name will always be connected with the abolition of slavery in the British Empire.

Latest political events have had their influence upon the New Year's toys which are now on show in the busy market of the boulevards, writes a Paris correspondent. A favorite toy represents an irate officer in French uniform kicking with his foot, actuated by a long spiral spring, the bent figure of a gorgeously paroled Freemason, whose antics, as he is touched by the foot, cause as much amusement to the grown-ups as to the children. This is a sign of the times, and shows how deep public resentment and disgust are at the Masonic organization and its campaign of spying.

Another blow has been struck against the sanctity of the marriage tie, and this time in France, says the London Catholic Times. Article 298 of the French Civil Code forbade the re-marriage of the guilty partner with the accomplices of his sin. The Parliament that sat from 1882 to 1884 made the article a law of France. Now the Senate has reversed the decision, and after hearing the opinion of its official reporter has struck the articles from the code. One of the senators, M. Lemaire, made an eloquent defence of the law, but in vain; by 178 votes to 53 the Senate passed to the discussion of the single clause, and then, by a show of hands, decided to recognize the legality of re-marriage between an adulterer or a divorcee and the accomplice. Thus does French society permit a most serious attack upon the sanctity and indissolubility of marriage. The Senate has put a premium upon adultery. Under the old law there was at least some check upon human passion from the knowledge of the gravity of the consequences of falling. Now the simplest way to avoid unpleasantness is to gratify passion, which will hereafter secure a divorce and re-marriage with the object of preference and affection. The family life of France has received another fatal stab. Society in this country is another step nearer to paganism.
