Reasons why S. Davis & Sons maintain the quality of their brands: It has taken the best part of a lifetime to establish the public have spent thousands upon thousands of dollars to introduce them. Having obtained the confidence of the public have saved the public have favored same. A deterioration of quality in their brands would not alone destroy the structure upon which they have spent their time, money and labor, but would result in a loss of that confidence the public have favored them with that money again spent in advertising to introduce new brands could not purchase. Therefore, is it to be supposed that any sane business man would be so foolish as to destroy in a short time what it has taken so long to establish. Their bas taken so long to establish. Their bas taken so long to establish the best value, the safest and most reliable sumbke, and cost no more to the consumer than Cigars of much inferior quality. Why smoke other brands or permit dealers (for more than Cigars of much inferior quality. Why with?

"Mr. Springrove," she returned, in a

AUTHOR OF "A PAIR OF BLUE ETES," "THE TRUMPET-MAJOR," ETC.

A man lingered along the public path on the other side of the river; she fancied she knew the form. Her resolutions, taking in the presence of Owen, did not fail her now, she hoped and prayed that it might not be one who had stolen her heart away, and still kept it. Why should he have reappeared at all, when he had declared that he went out of her sight forever?

She hastily hid herself in the lowest corner of the garden close to the river. A large dead tree thickly robed in ivy, had been considerably depressed by its icy load of the morning, and hung low over the stream, which here ran slow and deep. The tree screened her from the eyes of any passer on the other side.

She waited timidly, and her timidity increased. She would not allow herself to see him—she would hear him pass, and then load of the morning and hong love see him—she would hear him pass, and then load of the morning and here loads are loaded to the load of the morning and hung low over the stream, which here ran slow and deep.

She waited timidly, and her timidity increased. She would not allow herself to see him—she would hear him pass, and then creased. She would not allow herself to see him—she would hear him pass, and then look to see if it had been Edward.

But, before she heard anything, she became aware of an object reflected in the water from under the tree, which hung over the river in such a way that, though hiding the actual path, and objects upon it, it permitted their reflected images to pass beneath its boughs. The reflected form was that of the man she had seen farther off, but being inverted, she could not definitely characterize him.

He was looking at the upper windows of the house—at hers, was it Edward indeed? If so, he was probably thinking he would like to say one parting word. He came closer, gazed into the stream, and walked very slowly. She was almost certain it was Edward. She kept more safely hidden. Conscience told her she cughtnot to see him. But she suddenly asked herself a question: "Can it be possible that he sees my reflected image, as I see his? Of course, he does!"

He does!"
He was looking at her in the water.
She could not help herself now. She stepped forward just as he emerged from the other side of the tree and appeared erect before. It was Edward Springered, till the inverted vision met his eye, dreaming no more of seeing his Cytherea there than seeing the dead themselves.

Miss Ald clyffe, who, though she took little part in the day's proceedings, was, as it were, instinctively conscious of all their movements, put down her charge's agitation for once as the natural result of the novel event, Mauston himself was as indulgent as could be wished.

At length Cytherea wandered alone into the conservatory. When in it, she thought she would run across to the hot-house in the outer garden, having in her heart a whimsical desire that she should also like to take a last look at the familiar flowers and luxuriant leaves there. She pulled on a pair of overghoes, and thicher she went. Not a soul was in or around the place. The gardener was making merry on Manston's and her account.

The happiness that a generous spirit derives from the belief that it exists in others is often greater than the primary happiness itself. The gardener thought, "How happy they are?" and the thought made him happier than they.

Coming out of the foreing-house again, she was on the point of returning indoors, when a feeling that these moments of solitude would be her last of freedom induced her to prolong them a little, and she stood still, unheeding the wintry aspect of the carry-leaved plants, the straw-covered beds, and the bare fruit-trees around her. The garden, no-part of which was visible from the house, sloped down to a narrow river at the foot, dividing it from the meadows without.

"They Make Their Mark."

The people of Canada devote the whole winter to making this impression in the snow. You see it everywhere. It is the heel of the GRANBY, the most popular Rubber and Overshoe that has ever been introduced. Everybody wears them.

Every dealer sells them. FARMER'S PATENT ELECTRIC CONDUCTOR for rubber boots and shoes can be furnished with the Granby Rubber's when so desired. This ingenious divice re-establishes the electric current between the body and the earth and entirely does away will the constant drawing no the feet, which render rubber shoes so uncomfortable when for any length of time. This is the way that talk.
