International War at G.T.R. Station

A lively bit of international war was witnessed in the Grand Trunk waiting-room about 11 o'clock Wednesday night. A diminutive-looking American, who, from his loquacious manner appeared to have drunk "not wisely, out too well," of some strong Canadian brew, somehow aroused the ire of an Englishman of wiry build, who in direct violation of the protective tariff proceeded to paint the floor with Yankee paint, meaning the red lifeblood from his opponent's nose. Presently a big American traveller came on the scene and hostilities for a time promised to be renewed. But this time the Englisher had met a bigger man, and so contented himself with crying abusive names after the traveller's retreating figure after allowing him a reasonable time to get out of earshot. No arrests were made, the police and station officers deciding that the indisposed man had been to blame.
