The only opposition came from two Catholic gentlemen who stated that they wished to have their children educated daily in religious as well as secular matters. One of these gentlemen denounced the present system as "Godless" and predicted dire results from its continuance; but his melancholy forebodings must have been set at rest by Rev Mr Browning, who declared boldly and eloquently that the home circle, the church and the Sabbath school were the proper places for imparting sectarian instruction; having left Williams Creek on the 21st left williams captured a party of five men with a band car on their way to repair the telegraph line.
