The robbers were traced from Wyoming as far as Denfield. but there all track of them was lost, despite the fact that the London officers spent much time on the case. A TORONTO OPINION

A Toronto police official, speaking to a newspaper in that city, has the opinion that six distinct gangs of bank robbers are at work in the province and are operating out of Ottawa, London, Hamilton, Kingston, Toronto, Sarnia and Niagara. Using high-powered cars, it is an easy matter for them to journey far from their home base, steal a car for their escapade, drive many more miles, nob a bank and then escape, passing through several municipalities en route. Under such circumstances local police uthorities are practically powerless to deal with the bandits.
