ILIMINISTE AND TELL THE MEDICAL STUDENT.

So Miss Edwards is going to marry, And they say it's a capital match; But I know quite enough of the party, To affirm it not much of a catch. They say he's a medical man.

How people their friends will misc For as yet he is only a student, And has passed neither College nor Hall. And wears such a horrid rough coat, Fill'd up with those black wooden buttons

Which fasten quite up to the throat. Then his hat cost about four and nine With a brim very broad and quite flat What a pity that medical students, Are so fond of a Gossamer Hat.

And so he's beginning to read;
But he don't like the practice of Physic,
And thinks Botany foolish indeed.

He says the old saying's quite true.
Which all of you doubtless have known,
That Hydrogen means in and water, And Oxygen pure gin alone. And after he's past all his trials, He still from his lady must roam, For you know that a medical man,

Can scarce get a moment at home So Girls if you'll take my advice, You'll never repent of the plan, However hard up for an offer, Never marry a medical man.

TOM ROWLER'S REVENGE.

We were in south latitude twenty degrees west, longitude ten degrees eighteen minutes, on our passage from the cape down to St. Helena; the ship was dashing the spray before her, going through the water at the rate of ten knots, the wind was just abaft the beam and hardly enough of it to make a spar crack; every stirch of drawing to some act of criminality, and that any allusion to his flaggellation would most likely cause a bitter augmentation of his sufferings. After I had clad him comportant through the water at the rate of ten knots, the wind was just abaft the beam and hardly enough of it to make a spar crack; every stirch of drawing the street of wind was just abant the beam and that of drawing of it to make a spar crack; every stitch of drawing was an Englishman, and that I hoped, in a few was an Englishman, and that I hoped, in a few weeks, he would see the white cliffs and green looked beautiful as the breeze brought her topside down to the kiss of the larboard waves and the lee noun which he could apply to his "bonnie bark."

By Order of the Court the whole of his direful story rushed vividly or my mind as I gazed upon the wretch who, with the instinctive love of life, (the great boon of eaven to suffering wretches) clung to two or three deal boards, rather than close his miseries by THE Annual Meeting of the Stockolders of this Bank sinking into eternity. The men in the boat soon perceive, as they pulled him into our boat, that he

They soon came alongside, and ropes being handed down fellow, and under his armpits, and we slowly HE Annual Meeting of the Sockholders of the New Brunswick Steam Boat Company, will be holden in Fredericton, on Wednesday the 25th day of February reception, on Wednesdry the 25th day of February next, in Mr. Minchin's Brick Building, at 12 o'clock, upon his living flesh. He was a mere animated noon, for the purpose of electing a Committee for the skeleton. His eyes glared from the recess of their ensuing year, and for the transaction of such other busi-sockets, his cheek bones protruded almost through his yellow skin, his lips were blue, his beard was F. We took him under the awning of the quarter deck. A little water in a piggin was brought to him. O heaven!
I had no conception of what thirst is, till that moment. His limbs quivered as the precious, pure fluid touched his lips. And oh, the expression, the horrible expression of gratification that distorted his hardly human features, as his parched mouth and throat were cooled by the delicious draught Every restorative that could be thought of, and obtained on board the vessel, was administered to the sufferer, and at length sleep, nature's soft restorer, kindly shed her influence over him. He slept for two hours. When he awoke, I was seated alone by his side. He looked wildly around. "What-where-who-where am I?" he incoherently exclaimed "Is this a ship? that the face of heaven? O God!" he shut his eyes, and seemed absorbed in mental prayer for a few moments.

I took his hand, and with as much kindness as possible, asked him if he wanted anything, or if I could do anything for him. He grasped my hand tight in his hard but attenuated fingers. "You are not a fiend!" I replied "a friend who wishes to serve you." He grasped my hand still tighter and pressed it to his bosom. I saw a tear roll down his lank chee's. The steward of the vessel, passing at the moment, I sent him for a shirt of mine, and two or three articles of dress, enough to cover humanity in these tropical regions. The steward brought them. I had given my patient a little wine and water, and sopped a piece of bread in it, which with much difficulty he swallowed. I lifted him up on my arm, the moisture had evaporated from his garments, and left the salt crystals in every fold. I with much difficulty, stripped him; his back had evidently been lacerated by that accursed instrument the cat-o-nine-tails.

"Is your back painful!" I inquired. He shook his head in an agony, and replied "It is, sir, very, very painful."

I concluded that he had been flogged for some act of criminality, and that any allusion to his flag-
