Called to the Bar in the following year, he entered his father's law firm, and on the latter's elevation to the bench, remained with the other partners, the firm name now being Foster, Martin & Girouard. Of marked literary tastes, he gave material assistance to his father in his literary labours, he being joint author with him in 1890 of a new edition of his work on bills of exchange, and, in 1893, translating from the French his monumental work "Lake St. Louis, Old and New illustrated and Cavalier de La Salle". In October 1895, he declined the Conservative nomination for the representation of Jacques Cartier in the House of Commons. He is a R.
