noting that the first two years were marked by a general increase in the percentage of people who reported an "average" level of income.
This shift did not occur in either England or Scotland but rather it occurred in the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. In these countries the shift was made during the period 1960-1962.
This shift is also reflected in the percentage of people who reported
an "average" level of income.
In the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa the shift occurred during the period 1960-1962.
