Then word came that Santa Claus was near, and as he entered with his reply: white hair flying and in his bright traditional red suit, the children sang 'Three Cheers for Santa Claus," each waving a little flag in welcome.

W. J. Pollett, the superintendent, and Mrs. Pollett, the matron, with the staff of the house staff of the house and a fair-sized audience, witnessed the entertainment. Tea was afterwards served to the guests.

The Christmas tree and presentation of gifts to the children of the home is the big event of the year, each child being permitted to communicate the desire of his heart in the matter of toys in advance, and Santa, with the help of the members of the ladies' board, complying with every request.

A mural slab in the hall informs the visitor that the home was erected in 1852 by ladies of Toronto, assisted by a donation from Jenny Lind. How the famous singer became interested in the amous singer became interested in the institution, however, seems to have become obscured in the mists that cover the passage of time.

A charming mid-winter costume of this beautiful color was recently shown by a reliable and exclusive uptown costumer. The velvet used was of a very soft texture, particularly adapted to models in which gathered effects are emphasized. The skint and overblouse were made in one, the skint and overblouse were made in one, the skint, slightly high waisted, being gathered simply and very full. The over-bodice was cut low, rounded and sleeveless, and ornamented in the front with a cross lacing of black silk braid, fastening about small jet bouttons.

A lovely underwaist of the Bordeaux shade, Georgette crepe, had the long loose cuffed sleeves finished with a rarrow band of fur; the only other trimming being supplied by tiny slik hand-embroidered motifs at the corners of the soft turned back collar. The coat, which emphasized Russian features in the front fastening and long skirt section, was lavishly trimmed at collar, cuffs and hem with the fur, which also finished the short modish skirt.
