wounded in the Kleinhardt's fight, which was received here to-day, brings the casualties reported to date up to eleven killed and forty-six wounded, a total of 57.

This is believed to practically complete the list of casualties, as Lord Dundonald terms them: "Glorious losses" sustained by the Canadians in that engagement.

One important outcome of the affair is, as has been stated, to quicken the desire of Canadians at home to enlist in the fourth contingent. This is shown in the increased number of offers of service which are pouring in upon the Militia Department since Friday last.

No more inciting incident has occurred in this connection than the desire of Canadians at home to enlist in the fourth contingent. This is shown in the increased number of offers of service which are pouring in upon the Militia Department since Friday last.

Politicians Incensed.

Approxos of these messages, it has leaked out that the Minister of Militia and the government generally are incensed at Lord Minto for having "off his own bat," as it were, forwarded to the officer commanding the Canadian Mounted Rifles, the first congratulations from home upon their gallant record at the Kleinhardt's engagement.

The chagrin of the politicians who govern at Ottawa will not, however, be spared by the loyal people of Canada, who will perhaps be surprised to learn that, while all the cablegrams touching the Kleinhardt fight which have gone forward or been received by His Excellency from casually listed to congratulate the Canadian Mounted Rifles, the few which have passed thru the same all-absorbing topic have been doled out thru the party press as so much political information.

Who are the six? A letter has been received here from Dr. D. H. Baird, who is serving in a section with the 10th Hospital Field Corps, in which, after speaking of the smallpox outbreak among the men, says:

Yesterday six men rode out a few miles and they did not return. A searching party was sent out and they were all found dead. I do not know what company they belong to.

This section, which is the one that went out on the Victorian, March 2, was at the date of the letter moving to and it is thought that they had already joined the 10th Hospital Field Corps on the Manhattan when the engagement at Kleinhardt River was fought.

This idea is strengthened by the fact that one of the Field Hospital Corps is mentioned among those severely wounded. So far no details have been received regarding the names and addresses of the men who are reported in this letter as killed.

The letter speaks of the good service of Dr. Donaldson during the fighting, and also of the visit of Lord Kitchener.

PORT HOPE MAN A HERO.

A cable to The Evening Telegram yesterday identified the Canadian, who, although mortally wounded, emptied two bandoliers of cartridges at the enemy and then broke his rifle, as Charles Napier Evans, son of Harbourmaster Evans, Port Hope. The gallant soldier was born in Port Hope, July 13, 1874. He studied at the Port Hope High School, took a senior leaving certificate at Owen Sound, graduated at Ontario Normal College, taught entrance class at the Chatham Public School, and was afterwards principal of the Public schools of Huntsville and Amherstburg. He took the teacher's certificate course at Stanley Barracks, Toronto, in 1898, obtaining a certificate of qualifications. While in the barracks he acquired a love for the study of military tactics. When the Second Mounted Rifles were called for he joined in London, Ont., and in the shooting test made three bullseyes. He was no stranger to horse or powder, and had nerve enough to hold a gun or when a bar was needed to supply the muscle. He was of noble disposition, benevolent in action and ready for the service of the master in either world. He was a schoolmate of the late William McMullen, a Port Hope boy whose memory is held dear by the eastern town.

AUTOS FOR DEFENDING COASTS AIRSHIPS FOR WAR PURPOSES

British Government to Test Armor-Plated Car. Really a Fort on Wheels—Combined Aeroplane and Balloon Also Being Built for Army.

London, April 7.—The British government is about to experiment not only in air-ships for war purposes but in armor-plated automobiles for coast defence as well.

It is mainly designed for coast defence, but is equally suitable for offensive and defensive work over rough country, accepting of many of the advantages of a tank.

The air ship consists of a cigar-shaped balloon 180 feet long and 41 feet in diameter, from which is suspended a framework of tubular steel, 18 feet wide at the top and tapering to the bottom, almost as long as the balloon itself.

It can be driven and steered by one man and has an armament of two pom-poms, two automatic quick-firing six-inch and 1000 rounds of ammunition.

Three or four men can work the guns, but there is sufficient platform room to accommodate two or three men, with searchlights and a rope ladder, which can be drawn up when moving or fighting.

The car is of steel, impervious to small arms and suspended in such a fashion as to be apart from the car frame, to minimize the effects of vibration.

The motive power is applied by six sets of double propellers, each having three parallel blades, and so placed as to clear the propellers of the other's work. They are driven by petrol engines in each car. Fuel is carried in 36 tanks distributed in the cars.

Dr. Barton expects to develop a speed of 25 miles an hour. The balloon will weigh, when complete, 600 pounds. He claims that it will be able to develop four times the lifting power necessary.
