NEARLY DROWNED.

A small youth, with only one arm, attempted to cross the Cove on the new sewer pipe on Saturday afternoon, and fell into deep water. His companion could do nothing to rescue him, and the workmen of the sewer gang swam out and pulled the boy out as he was going down for the third time. It was a close call.

EXCITING RUNAWAY.

While Dr. W. Westland and his mother were out driving in South London yesterday afternoon, the horse, which was a spirited animal, took fright and started off at a breakneck speed. Both occupants of the rig were thrown out, but escaped without being badly bruised. The rig collided with a post and was smashed. The horse was not hurt.

REV. JOHN MUNRO DEAD.

A well-known clergyman of the Presbyterian denomination died yesterday at his late residence, 917 Colborne street, in the person of Rev. John M. Munro. Deceased had been ailing for about two years. He was pastor of the church at Kintore for a quarter of a century, but was compelled to resign on account of ill-health. He leaves a wife and family of three children to mourn his loss.

Macdonald's death. Sir John Carling will preside, and many prominent men have been asked to speak. After the meeting an informal afternoon tea will take place. Guests are asked to wear a red rose and a maple leaf. Omnibuses will leave the postoffice for the convenience of any who choose, at 2 and 3 o'clock.

DIVINE SERVICE ON THE HEIGHTS

All Battalions Were Massed on the Hillside.

A Grand Spectacle and an Impressive Service.

Sermon on Obedience by Rev. Canon Dann—Battalions in Camp Give the Seventh a Hearty Welcome—15,000 Visitors to Camp Yesterday—Many Heat Prostrations.

The most imposing and impressive church parade ever witnessed in the Forest City was that which took place on Carling's Heights yesterday, when over three thousand volunteers were drawn up on the hillside to hear the word of truth. The two brigades took up their positions shortly after 9 o'clock, and awaited the arrival of the Seventh Battalion, which came up in fine style in good time. The major-general himself superintended the movement, and no hitch was experienced anywhere. The scene was impressively grand. Over head the blue sky, under foot a soft carpet of green grass, down the hill the scarlet coats, helmeted infantry, the day-dressed rifles, the gay uniforms of the Hussars, and the glistering of arms, made a brilliant spectacle. The troops were stationed in a hollow square, within which the altar, covered with the Union Jack, was erected, and by this stood Rev. Canon Dann, of the Twenty-sixth; Rev. J. C. Farthing, of the Twenty-second; Rev. J. G. Stuart, of the First Hussars, and V. Archdeacon Davis, of the Seventh Battalion. Off a little further was Major-General Hutton and his staff, their white cockades fluttering in the breeze. Beyond the glistening sea of metal-tipped white helmets was another sea of umbrellas. The hillside was packed with spectators, who completed by encircling the uniformed troops. Ten bands massed together began the service with "Old Hundred." Along the hillside and among the troops the hymn was sung with enthusiasm. The text from which Rev. Canon Dann spoke was Psalms, lxxviii, 9: "The children of Ephraim, being armed, and carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle." "I do not wish, this morning," he said, "to enter into a critical examination as to the kinds of people that are pointed out in this verse. What is meant by turning back in the day of battle? We will take it this morning that it means the man, who, having been arrayed in the Queen's uniform, receiving the Queen's money, having had all attention paid him, marshaling him for drill and getting him prepared for that hour of battle, would turn himself back when that day came. You know that in the day of battle, in the time of war, the British army in the time of war, the man who would do that would be shot, and we would all say he deserved it, for to betray an army in the face of the enemy would be deserving no less treatment than this. Iscariot is held in disgust by everyone. He betrayed the cause of his Master and his leader, and if he had not handed himself, he would have deserved to be hanged. You soldiers have come here for this short period of time to learn to be equipped for war. You have come to learn to be equipped for that day when you may be called to defend the rights and liberties of your country. God grant that that day may be far off, but the best way to keep it far off is to be prepared for it. I am perfectly satisfied that the hearts of this country are behind the militia. I have many opportunities of speaking with those who are not actually engaged in the service, and although I think that peace at any price is the thing, we are to encourage the troops. The great body of the people is behind the military force. Take encouragement from that fact and build up that manliness and courage and love and truth which necessarily comes from drill. The drill will teach you the great Christian virtue of obedience. The man who first learns to look straight ahead learns the first lesson in spiritual truth. The fact of your learning drill will fill you up with many qualities. The great backbone of discipline is obedience. You men of discipline in the country don't at coming up from the drill which it is a trust and confidence. You learn to put your trust in your commanding officer, and the officers put their trust in you. All must obey. When the great muster comes and the roll is made up, and the great Captain will ride down the lines, you will answer to your name. Perhaps you will expect, as I might expect, and you will expect to hear him call out the heroes of the great battles. But no, it is the humble man, who has just simply done his duty, who has no medal of honor adorns his breast. "He had done what he could."

WARM WAS THE WELCOME.

At the conclusion of the service, Gen. Hutton, in a short address, congratulated the officers commanding at the excellent appearance of the men. He felt pleased at the attention and orderly bearing of the soldiers. The camp, he said, was a fine sight, and so far, unmarred by irregularities of any sort. He emphasized a point brought out in the sermon—Obedience. Too much attention could not be paid to the subject of respect from the subject to the subject. The general then referred to the Seventh Battalion—which was young, having been newly organized. He wished the Seventh to be received by the other battalions with a warm welcome, and asked for three cheers for the Seventh. Three rousing, enthusiastic cheers rent the air—such as only British soldiers can give. In tendering this greeting to Col. A. M. Smith, the general referred to the fact that Col. Smith had under him a young battalion with a great future before it. Politics should have no place in military matters. The battalion had now emerged from under the paw of politics, and he hoped it would hold aloof from politics altogether. Men of all political parties were found in a battalion, but a battalion should know no politics and no creed. A battalion stood for its Queen and its country, first, last and always.

THE MARCH PAST.

When the service broke up the Twenty-first Band led the First Hussars down the southern limit of the field, east for a short distance, and then north to the lines. Maj.-Gen. Hutton and a portion of the staff occupied a position commanding a view of the entire field. The movements of the Seventh were applauded all along the line, and as they passed the general he remarked "Well done, Seventh." The other battalions came in for a share of the applause, but, as might be expected, the majority of the citizens had eyes only for "our own boys."

SUNDAY IN CAMP.

The excessive heat yesterday did not deter citizens from visiting the camp, and it is estimated that those who visited the camp numbered between 12,000 and 15,000. Between 5,000 and 6,000 attended the service in the morning, and so great was the heat that men and women toppled over everywhere. Several soldiers were carried off the field. After the service the Twenty-sixth Band played on the grounds. In the afternoon thousands upon thousands of people walked round in the sweltering sunshine until exhausted, and groups gathered in every place that afforded any shade. The heat of yesterday in some measure demonstrated to the average visitor that the soldier's life is not a dream of pleasure, but one of hard work.

CAMP NOTES.

On Thursday night, the public are invited to a big tattoo, in which eleven bands will participate. Private King and Private Ryckman, of the First Hussars are in the hospital, having been kicked by horses. Rev. Canon Dann will conduct a ten-minute service in the lines of the Twenty-sixth each evening at six o'clock.

Lieut.-Col. White, of the Thirtieth, Major Denison, Capt. Panet, Capt. Bell, A.D.C.; Capt. Crowe, of the Thirtieth, and Capt. Kennis-Betty, of the Twenty-first have been appointed a committee to meet today and consider and report upon the recently adopted system of rifle instruction with the Morris tube. The committee will make such suggestions and recommendations as it may deem advisable. Lieut.-Col. White is president of the committee.

About 300 volunteers attended divine service in St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday morning. Gen. Hutton will review the First Brigade on Tuesday and the Second Brigade on Wednesday. On Thursday a field day will be held on the north bank of the river, in which both brigades will take part.

On Tuesday next the First Hussars will go out towards Delaware, on a reconnoitering expedition.

A DINNER PILL—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healing nutriment, it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convey the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with indigestion.

LABOR QUESTION IN THE PULPIT

City Preachers Discuss Industrial Conditions and Strikes—The Man With the Hoe.

Rev. James W. Pedley spoke to a large congregation at the First Congregational Church last night. He took his subject from Genesis 1, 27: "God made man in his own image." The speaker, in opening, referred to the picture of the world-famed artist, Millais, entitled "The Man with the Hoe."

This painting represented a toiler in the field, leaning on his hoe. The man's look and attitude suggests a heavy weight that has for centuries rested on his class. "This picture," said the reverend gentleman, "shows what man after centuries of hard labor and unjust and painful conditions of life, This is not due to nature, but to greed and abuse of power. It is simply 'man's inhumanity to man.' If we could only take out of man the inhumanity to man! History shows that man has not had half a chance to become like God's image. The hard conditions of labor have pressed upon man, and it is not until within the past century that people have tried to better these conditions for the working-man. Most of the people are toilers; only a few of us were born gentlemen. The great mass are toilers, and their conditions should be bettered. The control of man by man has always been to his disadvantage. There seems to be a League in man, which power brings to the surface." In speaking of the soldiers in camp, Mr. Pedley said he did not think they would ever be called upon to fight. War was practically a thing of the past between great nations of the world. "Arbitration," said the speaker, "will rule the world. Trouble will be settled by brain, and not with the sword." The speaker referred to the street railway strike, saying that the company were not fighting a few men, but the whole city. "It makes me laugh," he said, "to see those empty cars running up and down our streets. Why don't the people ride? Because the public think the men are in the right, and 'We walk.' It is the spirit of Jesus Christ at last beginning to get a hold. Down-trodden men should be protected against power and corporations. This is the true interpretation of God's word."

REV. THOMAS WILSON.

At the King Street Presbyterian Church last evening, the pastor, Rev. Thomas Wilson, spoke at some length about street railway and "G. T. R." about street railway and "G. T. R."

He pointed out the responsibilities and the trials of trackmen. The salary they received was, he thought, quite inadequate. Little wonder that the councils and parliaments of the country had taken the matter up. The speaker would rather be a horse-slave than have to support a family on 97 cents a day, he said. He went on to deal generally with the slavery of the working classes, and said the same principle was to be found right in London. Labor had organized because of oppression. Yet in those very organizations was safety for employers. If business was bad, the employer had only to show that fact to his employees, and the union would be satisfied with less wages until the income increased. The present trouble between the London Street Railway Company and its employees was not about wages, nor about hours. The company said they would arbitrate, but when the men came to arbitrate the company said "No; we will not recognize the union." The oppression of labor was general, and caused trouble, instead of peace and harmony, in the land.

The annual sermon to the Woodmen of the World, belonging to London, Lambeth, Mount Brydges, St. Thomas and Frome Camps, was preached in the Methodist Church at Lambeth yesterday afternoon by Rev. Robert McIntyre, of Tempo, a member of the order.

The Rossin House, Toronto.

To globe-trotters, the name "The Rossin," the finest hotel in Ontario, has long stood a synonym of cosiness, home-like comfort and up-to-date luxury, attributes which are much admired, and in reality possessed little by other pretentious houses. While being the most centrally located of the Toronto hotels, it is happily remote from all the noise, smoke and dust of the railways, yet only two blocks from the Union Station, York street, at its intersection with King street, Toronto's historic and most fashionable promenade.

In capacity "The Rossin" can comfortably accommodate 400 guests, 50 of its rooms having bathrooms attached. As a protection against fire it is built with brick partitions throughout. There are five stairways from the upper to the first floor, and, nightly, watchmen patrol the corridors, insuring the perfect safety of guests. An additional feature of the house is the absence of winding passages—all the hallways being attractively wide and lofty. In every respect the architect, with an eye to safety, health and comfort, wrought on a generous scale. In fine, the house is like its management, like its cuisine, like its patronage, the best and most modern in the city. This hotel home, it will be known with no surprise, has numbered among its guests at various times, members of the royal family, of the nobility and Proprietors.

THERE is not a more dangerous class of disorders than those which affect the breathing organs. Nullify this danger with Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil—a pulmonary, of acknowledged efficacy. It cures soreness and lameness when applied externally, as well as swollen neck and crick in the back; and, as an inward specific, possesses most substantial results.
