Under-Currents By The Duchess

"I shan't feel hungry the next time" says he "because I know you'll come. You couldn't be cruel enough to disappoint me now."
"Well, go," says she "If you were seen!"
"I'm going," says he reluctantly, and presently, when he has shaken hands with her for about a minute and a half, talking rapidly all the time to hide the fact that those pretty fingers are still within his grasp he finally takes himself off.

CHAPTER XII

Thou only hast stepped unaware—Malice, not one can impute; And why should a heart have been there in the world of fair women's feet? Peeping into the summer-house as she runs past it Griselda discovers, to her amazement that Vera is still in it.
"What have you never stirred?" cries she "Bless me have you stayed in this earwiggy place ever since? But", hopefully "I suppose you did stir; you went into the house, the gardens and came back again?"
"No I didn't," said Vera speaking in a low tense way of one who has been mentally whispering all day, as if afraid of being overheard. "I never moved from this I felt as if I couldn't" with a nervous laugh "I knew I might have met him if I had gone anywhere else, but here I was safe. He would hardly venture here again."
"What folly!" says Griselda severely, who is nothing if not practical. "My good girl have you thought that civilised people always dine? There will be dinner," says she, nodding a sapient head. "You'll have to face him there."
"I've thought of that" with a quick sigh.
"I must say," says Griselda with now, it must be confessed a smothered inclination towards mirth "that a more unfortunate affair I never knew. His face—did you see it?—it was a picture!"
"Don't go on like that, Griselda," says her sister impatiently. "I feel so wretched about it—just as if I hated myself!" She stops for a moment, and lifts the palms of her hands and presses them nervously against her hot cheeks. "To have offended anybody in that rude, inexcusable way makes one feel so horrid!"
"Inexcusable? I don't see that," says Griselda. "I don't see that it was your fault at all. You gave your opinion privately to me; if he chanced to overhear that opinion whose fault was it?"
"No one's of course!" She seems a little comforted by this bland disposition of her trouble and goes on again presently as if agreeing with it. "Yes, really and besides he isn't of so much importance any way. He's really nothing to us and one may surely speak to one's own sister without being reviled for it." It is quite plain now that she is trying to make herself look right to herself. Then all at once her tones change.
"But, yet I do wish I had never seen him, and that to-day had never been," she cries in a little hurt voice. "And—what was it you said about dinner, Griselda? Do you know that I really don't see how I am to get through it?"
"With a knife and fork and a spoon or two," says Griselda. "Well, I do wonder whether he will talk and pass it all over, or sulk and maintain a majestic silence?"
"I suppose I couldn't have a headache?" suggests Vera regarding her sister doubtfully.
"Oh no. Not on any account. Why, Vera where is your pink gone? Don't you suppose he would know? If would only make bad worse; create a mountain out of a mere molehill. I really think I should come down if I were you!"
"You're not, you see," says Vera with a little sigh, as if regretful of that incontrovertible fact.
"You mean that it is therefore a simple thing for me to argue on the point. Perhaps you even think I want you to come down to dinner to help me with him. If so, stay upstairs because I don't. And look here, Vera, after a what do you and I care what he thinks? If it will make you happier, have a headache by all means, darling, and I'll see it out with him."
She speaks in eager earnest. It has suddenly suggested itself to her that her afternoon has been one of certain dullness unspeakable, nay, something more than that. She determines if possible to save Vera from further discomfiture and nervous heartgivings.
"I shall quite enjoy a tête-à-tête evening with him," she says, smiling.
"No," says Vera after a silent struggle with herself, "I should hate to let him think I cared, though of course I do care; it is a miserable thing to hurt the feelings of anybody, even the most unworthy!"
"Oh, if he could only hear that!" says Griselda, throwing back her head and laughing merrily.
"Well, I dare say I should consider him more," says Vera "if he had not accepted my apology in so rude a fashion. When I think of it, I feel as if I couldn't show any more regret!"
"Just so," says Griselda. "And if you still want to shirk the dinner I'll so represent your absence that it will look like indignation, not penitence."
"No, I'll come down," says Miss Dysart slowly. "Why should I even feel myself in the wrong? Only—if there should be too terrible a silence at any time, I shall leave it to you to come to the rescue."
"You couldn't leave it to a better person," says Griselda gaily.

MOTHERS TO BE

Should Read Mrs. Monahan's Letter Published by Her Permission.

Mitchell, Ind.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me so much during the time I was looking forward to the coming of my little one that I am recommending it to other expectant mothers. Before taking it, sometimes I suffered with neuralgia so badly that I thought I could not live, but after taking three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was entirely relieved of neuralgia. I had gained in strength and was able to go around and do all my housework. My baby when seven months old weighed 19 pounds and I feel better than I have for a long time. I never had any medicine do me so much good."—Mrs. PEARL MONAHAN, Mitchell, Ind.

Uric Acid in Meat Brings Rheumatism

Says a Little Salts in Water May Save You From Dread Attack.

Rheumatism is easier to avoid than to cure, states a well-known authority. We are advised to dress warmly; keep the feet dry; avoid exposure; eat less meat, but drink plenty of good water.
Rheumatism is a direct result of eating too much meat and other rich foods that produce uric acid which is absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine; the pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly odd weather the skin pores are closed thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate the uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles causing stiffness, soreness and pain called rheumatism.
At the first twinge of rheumatism, get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts; put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.
Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism.

To Relieve Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness And Head Noises

Persons suffering from catarrhal deafness, or who are growing hard of hearing and have head noises will be glad to know that this distressing affliction can usually be successfully treated at home by an internal medicine that in many instances has effected complete relief after other treatments have failed. Sufferers who could scarcely hear have had their hearing restored to such an extent that the tick of a watch was plainly audible seven or eight inches away from either ear. Therefore, if you know of someone who is troubled with head noises or catarrhal deafness, cut out this formula and hand it to them and you may have been the means of saving some poor sufferer perhaps from total deafness. The prescription can be prepared at home and is made as follows:
Secure from your druggist 1 oz. Parmit (Double Strength). Take this home and add to it 1 pint of hot water and a little granulated sugar; stir until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day.
Parmit is used in this way not only to reduce by tonic action the inflammation and swelling in the Eustachian Tubes, and thus to equalize the air pressure on the drum, but to correct any excess of secretions in the middle ear, and the results it gives are nearly always quick and effective.
Every person who has catarrh in any form, or distressing rumbling, hissing sounds in their ears, should give this recipe a trial.
