The Privy Council laid down the rule that the Prog vince had already expressed its intention to lax property in the Province only in the first article of the law, and that the definition contained in a subsequent article could not extend the terms of this disposition. The Privy Council also found, to the great surprise of everybody, that the law was not consti-tutional. The reason which they mentioned in support of this finding was that the tax, under said law was an indirect tax, and that it was indirect because it obliged the party who made the declaration arant a statement showing the amount of duty which he has to pay), and as they thought such de-clarant would in most cases be the notary, they ame to the conclusion that if he had to pay he would obliged to recover from the heirs the duty for them, which brought the tax within the defini tion of indirect taxation.

This decision was the more surprising be aw clearly and explicitly excepted the notary from the obligation of making the declaration

A special law (Chap. 11 of 4 Geo. V.), deals with that decision and affirms that the intention and text of the law was to charge the duty to the heirs, legs tees or beneficiaries, and to nobody else. A case of a similar nature was dismissed lately by

Chief Justice Lemieux found that the Act of the egislature was perfectly constitutional, and that the legislature had clearly manifested its intention of taxing the movembles situate within as well as with out the Province, in view of the fact that the Privy Council, in numerous cases, had recognized the va-lidity of the application of the maxim, "Moveables follow the law of the domicile."

There was also a difference in the text of the law der which duty was paid in the Burland estate. The words "situate in the Province" in the hody of the statute, thereby doing away with whatever was equivocal or ambiguous in the phraseology, so tha
