Lady Marjorie's Love

"I thought it would be a long time before this I am sure." This answer of hers was such an unpropitious beginning that he found it impossible to follow glibly his reply to it with anything more. She quietly took him up as he faltered. It appeared, that after all she had not told the Countess quite all the contents of his letter.

"You said you were coming down for a particular reason, Loftus—at least I think so, didn't you?" The color rose warm and bright in her cheeks. "In location, you said she had taken the hint which he had been at such pains to convey—and taken it exactly the wrong way. The special reason could be but one, she had thought, and now she faltered, feeling angry with herself because it was so certainly his business and not hers to introduce the subject of their marriage. For him, he thought he saw the opening he had wanted to obtain, and did his best to seize it.

"Quite right, dear, I did say so. Your letters have had so little in them of course I know that you cannot have been in the mood for writing poor child. I understand that. You have told me so very little that I feel that I am quite in the dark—about your plans and so on, I mean."

"Plans?" Marjorie echoed blankly. "As to the future—when you leave here, I suppose it won't be long before those confounded Chadrums come down to take possession now! Rather decent of them, we must allow, not to have done so at once—as soon as they could. What are your arrangements for afterwards?"

"My arrangements?" She looked one amazed, bewildered. "I—I have made none, Loftus. You know that I—you know that I can't do so."

"Of course you will. You are a wise little woman, and you see it is the only thing to do." He saw the end of his ordeal so welcome near that he showed a wretched cheerfulness. "You do see it, don't you Marjorie?"

"I—I think so—yes." She looked up at him wistfully as he again stood beside her, as handsome as ever, as graceful as ever, just what she had always known him, and yet she did not follow the thought, poor child, or try to penetrate the meaning of the miserable tumult and pain in her breast. She had expected something utterly different, but what he had said was very sensible and right and inevitable, no doubt. She was confused, bewildered, disappointed, hurt, chilled, but duly acquiescent. "I suppose so," she said.

THE SECRET OF GIRLISH BEAUTY

The Blood Must Be Kept Rich and Pure, and the Nerves Properly Nourished.

Every parent of a growing girl and every young woman who looks after herself, should be constantly on the watch for symptoms of impoverished blood. Girls in their teens should not be pale, languid and constantly fatigued. Nature intended them to be bright, energetic and active. The happiness of a lifetime depends upon giving the blood the help it needs at this time, when girls are too frequently allowed to overstudy, overwork or suffer from lack of exercise.

The symptoms of impoverished blood are unmistakable. They are languidness of breath, violent palpitation of the heart, particularly on going up stairs, poor appetite, dizziness and headaches and a tendency to faint. These symptoms of course are not all found in every case, but the more the victim has of them the greater progress has the trouble made and the more imperative is the necessity to at once begin to check it, through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills which bring back the glow of health and energy to every part of the body. The case of Miss Jeanie Fraser, Hamilton Ont., offers proof of this. She says:

"For about eighteen months I was in a very bad state of health, and thoroughly run down. I had no appetite and suffered from most of the symptoms of anaemia. I went to a local doctor and received treatment from him for three months, and although I took bottle after bottle of medicine, I was steadily growing worse, and I got so down-hearted and depressed that I felt I would never get better. At this time I read the case of a young lady whose symptoms were similar to my own, who had been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I decided to try them. By the time I had used three boxes my appetite had improved and I was feeling more encouraged. I continued the use of the Pills for a time longer and my health was fully restored."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or may be had by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.
