I learn it from each star that wheels From every flower that blows, From all a young heart feels, And for all an old heart knows

COLLABORATION

It was an ideal collaboration. Everybody said so, and, in theatrical affairs, everybody always knows. At the end of the third act it was so evident that the play was to be a success that the men left off asking each other what the author could know about the stage, and the women decided that, after all, the color of the authoress' hair was much more nearly suburban than red.

The members of the profession in the circle determined to make the acquaintance of the lucky young couple without delay; the critics in the stalls felt a sense of relief at being able to say something really nice, for a change, without wounding their all-too-tender consciences, and the friends of the management in the boxes immediately hurried round to congratulate anybody and everybody, from the leading lady to the barbers.

"And now," said the audience, "they'll be able to get married and live happily ever afterwards." For it was an open secret—as open as most theatrical secrets—that these clever collaborators were engaged to each other, and needed only the money that a success would bring them to set off at once for their honeymoon.

It was rather a nervous business for them, getting into that hansom, but they managed it without any sacrifice of dignity, and the crowd had the satisfaction of hearing the author give the cab an address in the direction of West Kensington.

"It's really awful good of you," said the authoress, as soon as they had turned the first corner, "to see me such a long way home! Are you sure you don't mind, Dick?"

"Of course not," said the author "Feel tired?"

"Yes, I do now, but wasn't it splendid the way our big scene caught on?" "Ripping! Fairly knocked 'em! But I always knew it would. The difficulty was to make any manager believe it."

"Oh, they're so stupid!—all the ones who refused it, I mean. I should think they'll be rather sorry now."

"You bet! I had three offers for our next piece before I left the theatre."

"And I had two. That makes five altogether. We shall have a monopoly of the comedy houses," and the clever little woman leaned back in the corner of the cab and laughed happily.

"Well," said the little man, "now it has come, we'll make 'em pay, eh? I feel that I've got a lot to get back on this sordid old city."

"Never mind," she said, gripping his hand; "you've got your reward at last. You can have everything you want now."

"Yes—yes," he replied, glancing at her for a moment, and then staring straight in front of him over the horse's head.

There was a pause, until "May I light a cigarette?" he asked, rather nervously.

"Of course!" "Won't it?" He indicated her frantically by a sweep of the hand.

"Not a bit! And, besides, it wouldn't matter now, would it? Do you know," she leaned forward and slipped her arm into his, "things seem unreal to-night, unsubstantial. Nothing seems quite the same as it did yesterday—except!"

"Yes!" "I was going to say except you, but even you don't seem quite the same to-night. I didn't think I was so easily thrown off my balance."

"Perhaps," he said, flickering at his cigarette ash so clumsily that he burnt his finger, "perhaps I am not the same."

"What do you mean?" There was the slightest trace of suspicion in her tone. "I suppose you are."

"It's all through that rotten play!" "Don't say that. It's a good play."

"Yes, I know. But it's muddled things up frightfully. Do you remember the little tiff we had after one of the rehearsals?"

"Do you mean about—about Mr. Turner?" "No, no! I can't ever to have said anything about that. Of course, you had to be polite to a man playing such an important part."

THE CHATHAM DAILY PLANET

author opened the door, stepped out, and paid the caddy.

"Aren't you going back to the Temple with him?" asked the authoress. "No, I'll get another. I want to speak to you first."

The man drove away, and they began to climb the stairs, slowly. "I'm afraid I can't ask you in," said the lady. "Mother's away."

She paused on the landing below her own, and held out her hand. "But I thought I saw her in the theatre," he said, surprised.

"Oh, yes!" she replied, slightly confused. Very likely you did. But she's staying with some friends in another part of town. What was it you wanted to tell me?"

"I wanted to tell you that—that I care for Miss Sewell more than you think."

"Oh, Dick!" There was a world of reproach in her voice, and she looked up at him with wide, questioning eyes.

"That isn't all," he went on looking out of the staircase window into the dark street. "I—I proposed to her to-night after the third act."

"Well!" The question came sharply through her teeth.

"She accepted me. He waited a moment, not daring to look at her. Then he went on, 'I feel an awful brute. I ought to have told you before, when I found I didn't want to spoil the rehearsal, and—oh, for heaven's sake, say something!'"

He turned quickly, wondering at her silence. She was leaning against the banisters, and her head was bent so that he could not see her face.

"I won't ask you to forgive me now," he said, in a low voice, "but, perhaps—"

"Listen!" She laid her hand heavily on his sleeve, but kept her face turned away. He waited for her to speak, and in the stillness that followed he heard a hansom pull up at the entrance below.

There was the quick step of a man's foot on the stairs, and then— "Turn!" gasped the author.

"Hallo!" said Turner, "brought the wife home for me! Good man!" And he escorted his beaming bride up the remaining flight of stairs.

They missed Templeton. A little boy and a little girl, the boy was Dick, the girl was little Miss Templeton, and she was slowly and carefully crawling up a sloping mound of earth, carrying home a bit of something good for her babies' breakfast, says the Youthful Companion.

But every time she reached the top of the little mound Dicky would slip her over on her back, when she would roll helplessly down to the bottom again, while Dicky shouted with laughter. It was such fun—so Dicky thought.

The little bug was a curious and persevering little creature, however. No sooner would she land all in a heap on the bottom than another brave effort to reach the top would be begun. She would waddle slowly over her feet and begin to crawl up again, only to be tipped over on reaching the top, and to roll down the little hill again. Dicky laughed till the tears stood in his eyes—the little tumblebug did look so funny, rolling head over heels down the hill!

The little bug did not laugh, although I'm not sure but that tears were in her eyes.

She was crawling bravely up the hill for the eleventh time, when Dicky heard a whistle blow behind him, and turned in terror to find Ben, Walden, reaching for the silky curls that clustered under Dick's plaid Tam o' Shanter.

Ben was the horror of Dick's life just now; for he had a way of reaching for those silky curls, taking out his knife, sharpening it carefully on his boot, and pretending to cut the curls off, one by one, counting them carefully as he pretended to lay them down upon the ground behind Dicky.

It was all so real that the little boy would tremble all over, and cry as if his heart would break. But Ben would laugh, and, snatching off Dick's cap, which was the joy of his heart, would promise to rub it in the dirt, or to cut the top out with his knife.

He finished his "cut," as he called it—this morning by standing Dicky on his head in the dirt; then went off laughing, with Dicky screaming after him, through his sobs: "It's mean, mean, mean for a great big fellow to plague a little fellow so!"

Then Dicky rubbed the tears out of his eyes, brushed the dirt off his clothes, and flung himself in time to find the little tumblebug triumphantly reaching the top of the little mound of earth.

Dicky put his finger out quick to tip her over again, but what do you suppose he thought he heard? "It's mean, mean, mean for a great big fellow to plague a little fellow so!" Do you suppose it was the squeaky-voiced little tumblebug that said it, or something inside of Dicky that begins with a c-o-n?

Whichever it was, Dicky drew his hand back, stood still a minute, then walked away with a very thoughtful look on the little face under the plaid Tam o' Shanter.

"Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on thy charge, to stop his wounds lest he bleed to death." People can bleed to death. The loss of blood weakens the body. It must follow that gain of blood gives the body strength. Common sense Medical Discovery is in large part due to its action on the blood-making glands and the increased supply of pure, rich blood it produces.

It is only when the blood is impoverished and impure that disease finds a soil in which to root. The "Discovery" purifies the blood and makes it antagonistic to disease. When the body is emaciated, the lungs are weak, and there is obstinate lingering cough, "Golden Medical Discovery" puts the body on a fighting footing against disease, and so increases the vitality that disease is thrown off, and physical health perfectly and permanently restored. It has cured thousands who were hopeless and helpless, and who had tried all other means of cure without avail.
