Infatuation for Pretty Kalamazoo Uirl Broke Up a Family.

Allowed His Wife $10,000 and a Divorce, Educated the Girl, Then

Married Her. Kalamazoo, Mich., Dec. 10.-Miss Belle Hunt, of Springbrook, Kalamazoo township, was married Tuesday to Andrew Winklebleck, of Chicago, a wealthy lumber dealer, who fell in love with the girl while she was in his employ and suffered his first wife to secure a divorce with $10,000 alimony that he might marry her. The story of their attachment and its results has just become known nere. The girl went to Chicago in 1893 to live with an older sister. In 1897 the sister left for Calafornia to make her home, and Beile was left alon ein the city. She Beile was left alon ein the city. She entered a school for dress cutters conducted by Mrs. Andrew Winklebleck, on State St., and between her and Mr. Winklebleck a sudden attachment sprang up and flourished until the wife wished to send the girl away. This her husband refused to allow her to do, and when his son compelled her to leave, the father and husband had her educated as a stenographer and her educated as a stenographer and discharged the son's wife from his emfloy to make room for the girl in his

The wife became highly incensed at this and filled a bill for separate main-tenance, leaving her husband to his new-found love. He brought suit for new-found love. He brought suit for divorce against her, but, she responded with at cross-bill and defeated him, winning her freedom and $10,000 alimony. The son secured a large part of his father's business, and the son's wife has further complicated matters by bringing a suit for $10,000, alleging that she worked ten years for Winkelbleck without a salary.

At the time of the wedding in Springsbrook it was not known there that Wankelbleck had ever been mar-that Winkelbleck had ever been mar-ried. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's sister, and was the home of the bride's sister, and was attended by a very largel numb-ber of friends. It was made a notable social event in the country district where it took place, and the couple were given a royal send-off upon leaving. Winkelbleck is said to be very wealthy. The girl is remarkably pretty, and her family is one of the best in the farming district which has been their home.

"Gustave, I want you to examine this young lady's literary qualifications, see if she is competent to teach Theresa's children and assist her if she is not. Will you do it?"

"Certainly."
So the examination was then and there commenced, and in a few days Maude Heath was established as daily governess in a fashionable family. She went home every night to her quiet little nest with old Gretchen, and there Professor Cavallo soon followed her, to go on with the

Ah, those evenings were glimpses of restlike paradise to her after the care and excitement of the day. Old Gretchen's little spare room was neat as wax, and Maude's dainty taste soon brightened and ornamented it in the most charming manner. Professor Cavallo enjoyed its homelike beauty and charm to the

"You may not be a good housekeeper," he said one night in reply to some depre-catory remark of Maude's, "but you are certainly a homemaker."

The mother coming in just at this mo ment confirmed the report. The girls were to be sent to a convent school immediately. Henrique was to be placed again in charge of his Uncle Gustave, and the mother, baby and nurse were to start in a few days for South America.

"But I have remembered you, Maude," said the mother, kindly. "I have a friend going to Europe next week. Her little daughter, 11 years old, is delicate, almost an invalid. They want some one to care for and amuse her. It will be an easy place and a delightful trip for you."

Maude thankel her benefactress as well as she could but her heart was beating wildly. Would he let her go without a word? Was she caring too much for him? Was it best?

He came with the twilight to the bright little room, he bent with evident enjoy-ment over the blooming plant, he fasten-ed a branch of the ivy over a fine engraving, then he sat down, cold and quiet. Maude talked of various things with a sort of sad playfulness in her manner, as though she waited for something. He related some incident of the young men at the college where he was lecturing and spoke of himself.

The book she was holding fell to the floor, and as he returned it to her he touched her slender hand. It was hot and feverish. She drew it away, saying, as though she spoke to one of the children, "Please don't, my dear."

He laughed and asked: "Why do you call me your dear?"

and preoccupied. He goes around there once, but the litthe goes around there once, but the fit-the room is dark, and the door is locked. Then busy days of bustle and excitement crowd close upon each other, and when it is all over, when the voyagers are off on their journey and the house is still, he asks suddenly of Mrs. Edgarton: "But where is Manda?"

"But where is Maude?"

"Maude?" she questions. "Oh, the governess! She has gone to Europe."

Annie Laurie.

Annie Laurie, about whom so much has been sung, was a real maiden, who was born in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, in 1082 and was quite as beautiful as the poet would have one believe. Mr. Douglass Finland, who composed the song "Bonnie Annie Laurie," was very much love with her, but she married anothin love with her, but she married another man, one Alexander Furguson, who probably did not write songs about her.

My friends all thought I could never recover. I was reduced to 100 pounds. When I was three months along for my third child I was taken with hemorrhage or flooding and came near having a miscarriage from female weakness. For two months I was under the care of our doctor, but was getting weaker all the time until one day I happened to come across one of your little books and I read it through, and the next day I sent and got three bottles of 'Pavorite Prescription' and one bottle of 'Pellets.'
