Great Men Who Drank.

Cato was a hard drinker, while, in the language of one writer, old Ben Jonson was constantly "pickled." The poet Savage used to go on the hardest kinds of "tears," and Rogers observed, after seeing his own statue, "It is the first time I have seen him stand straight for many years." Byron says of Porson, the great-classical scholar, "I can never recollect him except as drunk or brutal, and generally both." Keats was on a spree ence that last-ed six months. Horace, Plato, Arised six months. Horace, Plato, Aristophanes, Eurlpides, Alcaeus, Socrates and Tasso of the old timers and Goethe, Schiller, Addison, Pitt, Fox, Blackstone, Fielding, Sterne and Steele were all hard drinkers at intervals.-

NINETY-EIGHT PER CENT.

There is a fascination about big profits to a business man. But the conservative and cautious trader prefers to have the lesser per cent. of intarest and the larger per cent. of intarest and the larger per cent. of safety in his investments. There is no business man who would not consider it a sound proposition to invest in an enterprise in which absolute loss was impossible and which offered ninety-eight chances in a hundred of a rich profit. The statistics of cures effected by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery show that ninety-eight per cent. of cases of "weak lungs" can be absolutely cured. Almost, if not all forms of physical weakness may be traced to starvation. Starvation saps the strength. The body is just as much starved when the stomach cannot extract nutrition from the food it receives as when there is no food. "Weak lungs," bronchial affections, obstinate coughs, call for nourishment, "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies that nourishment in its most condensed and assimilable form. It makes "weak lungs" strong, by strengthening stomach and organs of digestion which digest and distribute the food, and by increasing the supply of pure blood.

NEW LIGHT ON NAPOLEON.

Discovery of Books Read by Napelson Reveals Taste In Nineteen Well Thumbed Volumes.

The subject of Napoleon Bonaparte's Hterary tastes has been receiving attention recently, and a number of books from the Emperor's private library have suddenly come to light, and Britons will be not less interested than Frenchmen the instates subject to the subject of the su in the nineteen volumes once owned by the first consul that have just been discovered in Marsellies. Heretofore little has been known about Napoleon's favorite books. His annotated copy of Machiavelli has run to more additions in Brance than the to more editions in France than the plain copy of "The Prince," and the marginal notes leave little doubt that the book was read and reread by the mperor.

But what else did he read? Some But what else did he read? Some biographies mention that he borrowed Rousseau's "Confessions" when at Valence, in 1788, and it is also known that he liked Mollere and admired Cornellie so much that he would have made him a prince if he had come back to earth. The finding of these nineteen little Cazin editions at Marseilles, however, has almost doubled the knowledge about what Napoleon read. Among the newly found books are two volumes of Bacon's essays, two volumes of Mme. de Stael's "Influence des Passions," and Mercier's "Visions Philosophiques." These nineteen are all that remain of 130 which Napoleon deposited at the Marseilles library when hurrying back to Paris from Egypt. He forgot to reclaim them, and they remained there until 1814, when M. Thibadeau, prefect of the Vienne, commandered a hundred of them. fect of the Vienne, commandeered a hundred of them. The remainder lay on a top shelf behind some dusty quar-tos until 1818.

A certain M. Gauffret found them

A certain M. Gauffret found them then and wrote an article about his discovery in a Marseilles review. He wrote down the names of the books and mentioned the passages annotated er underlined, and also said that a certain page in Mme. de Stael's book bore a large coffee stain. He reminded his readers that Napoleon drank a great deal of coffee, and used to read at meals when in Egypt.

The coffee stain is still to be seen—though faint now — on the page mentioned by M. Gauffret. The marks in these little books show that Napoleon liked to read history and philosophy.

One passage marked in Mercler's "Visions Philosoph!ques," on a page which is torn, provides food for reflection. Mercler tells of a mythical person called Misnas. Misnas was honored as the most valiant captain of International Control of the International Control of International Control ed as the most valiant captain of India, and eager crowds held him in much respect and admiration. He was able to approach the presence of his god, being one of the first to receive that awful honor. He received it with an ironic smile, as though indifferent or superior to his own destiny. Misnas looked out over the future, first on the side of happiness. He saw his victorious career; he beheld conquered towns and subjugated peoples and poets all eager to learn of his great deeds and to transmit them to posterity.

The World's Submarine Cables. The World's Submarine Cables.

There are about 225,000 miles of cable in all at the bottom of the sea, representing $250,000,000, each line costing about $1,000 a mile to make and lay. The average useful life of a cable nowadays is anything between thirty and forty years, according to circumstances. About 6,000,000 messages are conveyed by the world's cables throughout the year, or 15,000 a day, the working speed of any one cable being up to 100 words a minute under present conditions. About 90 per cent. of these are sent in code or cipher.

Mosquitoless Cities.

Over in Europe there are many happy towns where the note of the mos to is never heard and the inhabitants don't care a snap about the pennyroyal market. Serenading Felicia

"Run out, children; run out and play." coaxed Felicia, "shooing" them along with the skirt of her pretty

"You come, too, Aunt Fillie," begged Jimmie. "You said you'd play 'timbuktu' today."

"I'm going to be very busy this morning, Jimmie," evaded Felicia. "Going to try on?" cried Gladys ecstatically. "Oh, do let me stay!" "I'm not going to 'try on,' Gladys; it isn't the dressmaker who is coming.' Felicia smiled happily. The brown eyes of Bobby the adora-ble opened wider and then narrowed knowingly. "You goin' to have p'tic'lar comp'ny?" he demanded. Felicia's joyous laugh rang out sweetly. "Yes, Bobby, very particular company." "I'll bet anything it's Mr. Parker," grumbled Jimmie. "I don't want to go away if it is."

"Oh, let us stay!" cried Gladys, jumping up and down. "Mr. Parker'll want to see us—he always does. You know, Aunt Fillie," argumentatively, "he said the other day he was very fond of children."

"Yes, I know," hurriedly, "he is fond of children-good children, obedient children"-"Then we'll thtay," agreed Donald placidly. "Of course," assented Gladys and Jimmie, with one accord, seating themselves on the steps with cheerful alac-

"Come on, Bob," Jimmle added patronizingly.

But the adorable one stood aloof. regarding Felicia with gravely re-proachful eyes. "Has he got somepin" p'tic'lar to say to you?" frigidly. Felicia laughed and blushed rosily. "I think so, Bobby," gently. "Now, Jimmie," coaxingly, "you are the oldest —you ought to set the others a good example. Take them away and have them play something. I want to talk with Mr. Parker a little while, and then perhaps we'll play."

Jimmle rose grandly. "I'm most nine," importantly. "I'll boss the others. Come on, kids."

He stopped and turned to his pretty aunt with masculine superiority. "But if you're smart you won't keep Mr. Parker shut up is that dark parlor very long. I bet he druther play 'timbuktu.' Come on, Bob. What you standin' there for?"

Felicia paused on the steps and looked back apprehensively. The adorable one stood in the path, his feet planted wide apart, his hands thrust into the pockets of the recently acquired trousers and a faraway look upon his trousers and a faraway look upon his beautiful face that somehow filled Felicia's heart with foreboding. Had she known Bobby better she might have feared less—or more! She ran down the steps and laid a detaining hand on Jimmie's arm.

"Jimmie, dear," she whispered in the steps and laid a detaining hand on Jimmie's arm.

pressively, "remember that Bobby is your guest, and you must do everything you can to make him happy."

"All right," gruffly, still with a sense of being defrauded. "Come, Bobby."

"Go with the others, Bobby," coaxed
Felicia alluringly; "they will show you their pets."

He brought his heaven turned eyes down to her face.
"Some day," he breathed sweetly, "I shall give you a Sarah Nade.'

"So you shall, Bobby," gratefully, whenever you wish." Bobby skipped away, and Felicia ran stiging up the steps.

"Isn't it sweet of him?" she thought.

"I never heard him sing except that once at All Saints'. I don't wonder they call him the adorable one! Such a lively thought, to give me a serenade?"
"This is my dorg," introduced Jimmie proudly. "His name is Bunch o' Brightness, but we call him Bunch for every day. Get your cat, Gad. Glad's cat is a blue ribboner!"

The big, fluffy Persian was brought out for the admiration of the guest, who regarded it with coldly critical eyes.

"Where's Don's pet?"
"It's a parrot," explained Gladys.
"He's in the house—in a cage. When we got Fluff we had to shut the parrot up, 'cause he wanted to pick Fluff's eyes out."

cried Jimmie. "He can say 'Now's the time,' 'Go it, old boy,' and 'I'll bet on you,' plain as I can."

"Let's bring him out," tempted the adorable one, "and look at all three together and see which is the nicerest."

"Oh, we can't!" cried Gladys hastily "If they should fight, Aunt Fillie would be most scart to death."

The back of the adorable one is

"Has it got tails?" The possibilities of the proposal appeal to the adorable

"All right. Can't you put a skirt on, Don? Then there'll be two ladies and two gentlemens in the Sarah Nade."

Don objected, but his minority vote was not recorded, and twenty minutes later the procession stole noiselessly up the steps and opened the door into the cool, dark hall.

Don, bearing the bellicose parrot, staggered patiently up the front of his mother's new tailored skirt; Gladys, with Fluff's claws digging wildly into her bare arms, switched the train of a pale blue foulard; Jimmie held his hand over the quivering jaws of the anxious Bunch and divided his atten-tion between the trailing silk draperies in front of him and the two tails that dragged the ground at his rear. The adorable one, walking somewhat remotely, bore no indication of any participation in the proceedings.

Their entrance was evidently not happily timed. An athletic young man sprang to his feet with a smothered exclamation, and Felicia was silent from sheer consternation.

Don's next step, gasping "Where the love in your eyes I could see," was inimical to renewals of any sort. Being born under Cancer, his movements were usually sidewise and crablike, and the clinging broadcloth skirt added to his uncertainty of balance. He fell heavily, and his chubby foot and legs upset the shricking Gladys and bowled the valiant rag and bone vender on top of his suffering sister. Gladys in falling grasped despairingly at the legs of the astounded Parker and brought him to his knees on the howling heap.

Poll escaped from Don's clutches and instituted a severe investigation of every leg, arm or body within reach of her vicious beak, clamoring incessantly. "Go it, old boy! Now's the time! I'll bet on you!" Bunch o' Brightness showed his fighting blood in violent attacks on Poll and the yowling Persian.

The man disentangled himself angrily and turned to the new hysterical girl. "I suppose you call this funny, Miss Austin, but I must confess my idea of a joke fails to coincide with yours. He stepped grimly over the strug gling mass, kicked Bunch-not gently -and with apparent relish cuffed the squeaking parrot. "Glad tidings of great joy I bring." sang a seraphic voice as Parker strode into the hall. The adorable one was standing in his most admired Sunday pose, his hands loosely clasped before him and his beautiful face turned up-ward. He smiled beatifically into Parker's face and completed his carol. "Did she like it?" with sweet solici-"Did she like the Sarah Nade?"

"Bobby," sternly, "who put up this job and what is it for?" "Me," proudly. "We wanted to Sarah Nade her."

"Me," proudly. "We wanted to Sarah Nade her."

From the parlor came a pitiful sob and then a shrill, insistent, childish voice, "Did he say, Aunt Fillie—did he say that p'tic'lar thing he came to say?"

Onions are an excellent cure for sleeplessness. They act as a kind of soporific if taken in small quantities before retiring. They will be found to be more appetizing if finely chopped up and laid between two thin wafers up and laid between two thin waters or biscuits. Eaten in this way, they are also easily digested. The reason so many people compiain of onions disagreeing with them is that they eat too much of the homely vegetable. Onions are not intended to be eaten en masse. When they are taken raw they should be thoroughly masticated, or, better still, the juice of the onion should be pressed out and taken on bread or as a sauce. In this form the onion is splendld for liver complaints and acts in consequence as a purifier for a dark and muddy complexion.

Salmon Sometimes Caught at Sea. The salmon is one of the anadromous fishes, of which the shad and sturgeon are other examples, anadromous fishes being those that come from the sea and ascend fresh water streams to spawn and return to the sea again after spawning. It is not known of the shad whether it remains in deep water in the ocean not very far away from the river whence it came or whether it goes south, but it seems certain that some salmon at least spend their sea life not far away from their rivers, for salmon have been caught at sea in northern waters off the New England coast on hooks baited for cod, haddock and habitut.
