Kentucky is just now boasting of a well, the clear, limpid, drinkable waters of which are as inflammable as naphtha.

Five century plants, all in bloom, is the interesting and very rare sight now to be seen in Los Angeles, in the garden of the Church of Our Lady of All Angels. They are said to be growing about a foot a day.

The bust of Gladstone, modelled by Miss Mary Redmond, was considered so clever that Lady Aberdeen ordered a large number of small copies to present as gifts to her friends. Miss Redmond is an Irishwoman, and resides in Dublin.

Postmaster General Wanamaker carries the heaviest life insurance in America—$1,500,000. It costs him $75,000 a year to carry this sum, but if he lives till he is 65 he will get the million and a half besides the the interest. In the event of his death before that period his family will receive the money.

Miss Clara Louise Kellogg while living at her summer home in New Hartford, was petting a dog when he seized a diamond ring she had taken from one hand and was holding in the other. The dog swallowed the jewel, which had cost the owner $350 and the prime downs began negotiations for the purchase of the dog. The owner agreed to part with the dog for 50 cents, which Miss Kellogg gladly paid. The animal's value was then $350.50

Mr Nathan Harris of Rich Valley, Va., has a daughter 19 years old, who is only two feet ten inches in height and weighs just 40½ pounds. She is well proportioned and intelligent, and her hair sweeps the floor when she stands erect. She is the eldest of four children. She has lived in the Valley all her life with her parents, but very few have heard of her existence until recently, her parents not desiring notoriety.

Mr. W. W. Wells, of Leith, England, has invented and patented a small steel boat which he claims is absolutely unsinkable. It is built and put together in sections which are both air and water tight, and it cannot, he says, be sunk if those should be pierced both above and below the water line at the same time. The sections are three in number. Mr Wells designed the boat for sporting and shooting purposes.

Jules Verne published his first novel when he was thirty-five years old. Since then he has written an average of two books a year, and is now the author of sixty volumes of more or less fascinating interest. Writing a book with Verne is a work of prodigious toil. Before putting a single line to paper he mentally prepares all his material, makes his maps, lays out his routes and reflects upon his work for months. Then when the story has been written, he corrects it at least ten times before giving the final proofs to the printer.

The Walker twin steers, which are owned by a Missouri farmer of that name, are to be exhibited at the world's fair, if Mr. Walker can find no larger ones, which seems probable enough. They are six years of age, 12 feet six inches long, 15 feet around the chest and shoulders and three feet two inches across the hips. Their combined weight is 8,040 pounds. One is called Benjamin Harrison and weighs 4,000 pounds. Grover Cleveland is the name given to the other, which weighs 4,040 pounds. They are insured for $10,000.

A notable figure among the students at Oxford University is Cornelia Sorabji, a tall, olive-skinned Hindoo girl. She is a remarkable scholar, and at the age of 18 became Professor of Literature at Bombay; but she longed for an advanced education, and went to England seeking admission to the historical and literature classes. Her examination papers attracted considerable attention on account of their brilliancy. Her papers on Roman law, written after six months' study, were declared by the examiners to be the ablest ever written at the university by any student of either sex. The young lady wears a native dress, usually of pale blue crepe, with gold embroidered mantle over her shapely head.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor's biography of Mr. Parnell, though turned out at a rate almost unprecedented in the history of book productions, has all the graces and fervor of style which won such popularity for his biography of Lord Beaconsfield and his history of the Parnellite movement. Mr. O'Connor was a dissenter from the recent policy of the fallen chief, but he never was blind to his eminent qualities. These he very fully acknowledges, concluding his sketch with the words; "There is no doubt about Parnell's greatness. He was portent, a great and tragic exception to nature's ordinary laws like an eclipse or an earthquake." Whilst endowed with such remarkable gifts as a political tactician, Mr. Parnell was by the testimony of Mr. O'Connor, as well as by that of Mr. Justin McCarthy, singularly defective in literary culture. He probably never read Shakespeare or the bard of his country, Tom Moore. Indeed, it is even doubtful if he ever read a poem or a novel in the whole course of his life.

A Protestant's Tribute.

HE VISITS ROME, STUDIOUSLY OBSERVES AND TELLS HIS CONCLUSIONS

Rev. William Wilkinson, a Presbyterian clergyman, lectured at St. Andrew's church, Minneapolis, Minn., on "Catholicism as I found it in Rome." Among other things he said:

"I had not and have not the slightest intention of ever becoming a Roman Catholic. I am perfectly satisfied with the religious views I hold, but this shall not prevent me doing, to the very best of my ability, ample justice to every man, whatever faith he holds, and to every creed as I understand it. When we put aside prejudice, there is to-day no part of the Church of God which can with more reason ask at the hands of all, as an act of simple justice, a calm consideration of those principles which have for sixty generations made it a power, and which have charmed and captivated some of the choicest minds known to fame. There is no delusion more absurd than that which is held by many persons that education is sure to lessen the power of this branch of the Church. In literature, in art, in sculpture, in architecture, in music, in science and in letters for a thousand years, the members of this Church held power which was almost absolute. And today it probably has 200,000,000 members of its communion, 8,000,000 of whom are our fellow citizens on these shores.

"A church which can through more than 250 Popes show an unbroken chain of work does not need to speak with undue objection when it says: "Gentlemen, we ask you to consider our history. We admit it is not perfect, but in its sanctions millions of men have sweetly lived and without a single fear have died, some of whom have done service for the world which has made it their debtor forever.'

"It was with these and other feelings that I entered Rome in July. I knew there could be no effect without a cause. So I looked with studious care to find in present men and actions things which, if practised by men in other days, would give the historic results we know to have taken place. I was not disappointed. I met Monsignor O'Connell, D. D., the rector of the American College in Rome. A man he is of vast reading and accurate observation. If for an instant you admit his premise you must admit his conclusion. I can well understand how such a man as he is finds rest in the faith of an infallible Pope, which doctrine settles for him many doubts and vexed questions. I had three long interviews with the rector. Americans have given more than $100,000 for the work of endowing the college. So it may go on to the end of time, training young men for the American priesthood.

"Rome knows how important it is that her teachers shall on the one hand know perfectly and love truly the Church, and on the other be well informed in the genius of the people among whom they are at work. We have in our midst striking examples of both these facts in the heads of the Roman Catholic Church in this State. So every nation has its college in Rome, and there are about two thousand students for the priesthood there all the time. Each year as they end their student days they are sent to any place to work the appointe for purpose of propaganda. This is a vast power, and it has again and again shown what it is capable of, for in the new world with comparative ease amongst its own people, it repeats in complicated conditions its old-time Middle Age triumphs.

"These are not accidental coincidences. They are the result of wise, deep, and far-seeing design, and of a conviction amongst priests and people that they work for the eternities and for God. It is a popular mistake to think that the men who are at the head of the Roman Catholic Propaganda are out of sympathy with the nations in which they work; that they are in profound ignorance of what is being done and said by Protestants; for the contrary is the case. The rector of the American College in Rome knows what the scholarly Baptists like Prof. Harper are writing and planning as well as the Baptists here know it.

"The same is true in regard to Prof. Briggs, and the German Rationalists, and the English churchmen, dissenters and atheists. In Rome I soon found out that the loss of the English people in Reformation times is looked upon as one of the greatest the Roman faith ever had. The celibacy of the priesthood, the concentration of power, the obedience to authority, the splendor of church architecture, the magnificence of its liturgy and wondrous song would not have availed to make it the power it is had it lacked other qualities. Whatever may be said to the contrar the great historic Churches of Christendom, the Greek, the English, have never denied to the Church of Rome the claim of a true Church with valid ministry and sacraments. They have said much about its traditions and assumptions. They have said it was a "noble faith spoiled," and the like. That it has principles which are deep in the heart of God has never been denied except by fanatics. The grandeur of the churches throughout Europe are owing to the truth that those who trust them did believe in God. He was very near and very dreadful to them. Law was imperious, sin terrible, Christ a mighty Saviour, judgment at hand, purgatory, hell and heaven not myths. These things lent impetus to missionary enterprise, and sometimes led to scenes which are no to the honor of the Church, as zeal without discretion is at all times dangerous. We must not judge men of other faiths and olden times by our enlightened days, or we shall err. In Rome I learned, as I have never before had, to think that the faith which saw the very inception of the highest civil nations which flourished to-day would not be abolished by the designs of men of our own time. For good or for ill, the Roman Catholic Church is here and to stay. If we have a purer religion the way to lessen the influence of theirs is not to attack it in violence but by a wise design and by hard work and holy life extend our own. The way to extend truth is to call it into the arena; in the light of day let it grapple with error."

He Fought at Trafalgar.

In the small and rather dull town of Hyeres, France, there was a great banquet on Sept. 1st, in honor of a most interesting person. On the day of the banquet this man scored his one hundredth year. But it is not for that he is most remarkable. He is the last survivor of the battle of Trafalgar.

Louis Cartigny, or Father Cartigny, as everybody calls him in Hyeres, was born there, and was quite a lad when Nelson was undoing so much of what the 'Corsican parvenu" was doing on land. Cartigny, who was a common sailor, was captured by the British, and after some distressing experiences in British transports, of which our own forefathers had sad knowledge, returned to France and to Hyeres, where he has been a steadily growing figure as the years have passed and the little Corsican and his legions and his conquests have faded away in the purple mists.

When his one hundredth anniversary came around the young men of Hyeres got up a great banquet, and presented the old man with a silver medal. The old man, who is hale and erect, and has only one sorrow—a troublesome wound got in battle—has been in a state of ecstasy ever since.

For years he has been very fond of walking about the main streets, because he could hear people say as he passed: There goes Cartigny, the only survivor of Trafalgar." He would tell his story to any one who cared to listen, and the story is said to have vastly improved with age, as indeed all things should.

But aside from the glory Cartigny has got little out of it. He has no property of his own, and his pension is only $106 a year. Napoleon III. allowed him $60 more than this, but the fall of the Second Empire cut that off. Despite the smallness of his living Father Cartigny does not complain. He thanks God daily that he was born a Frenchman, that he got a wound in the service of France, and that he might die on the French soil of his native Hyeres.

Europe's Oldest Church.

THE HISTORY OF THIS TIME-STAINED SACRED EDIFICE

The oldest church in Continental Europe, says the Boston Transcript, is the Church of Sta. Maria in Trastevere in Rome. In the year 221 Pope Calixtus I. obtained permission from the Emperor Alexander Severus to build a church. This church, it is said, was the first that was made public in Rome.

It underwent a number of repairs, and was rebuilt from the foundation in 1139. If the foundation is taken into consideration it is the oldest. There is, however, another old church in the same city which has not been built over.

It is St. Clement's, and is reputed to be on the site of the house of St. Clement; it was built in 417, and its primitive style is still preserved. The Mosque of St. Sophia, Constantinople, was originally a Christian church, having been built in 325 by the Emperor Constantine.

It was destroyed by fire in 404 and was rebuilt upon the same foundation in 415, and again destroyed about 450 and rebuilt in 532.

When Constantinople was captured by the Moslems it was converted into a Mohammedan mosque. In Spain the Cathedral of Zuragoza is said to have been the Temple of Diana, and was converted into a church after that city (the first in Spain) professed Christianity under the preaching of St. James.

As he suffered Martyrdom in the year 44, this places the Cathedral of Zaragoza in the fore rank, but the authenticity of its antiquity is defective. In England is claimed for the Abbey Church of the Abbey of Glastonbury a great antiquity. Tradition says that the church was founded by Joseph of Aramathea.

It is, however, in ruins, as are its two companion chapels, S. Joseph's and St. Mary's, both of which were built in 1140.

Catholic News.

Cardinal Manning is to have a coadjutor. The office will probably be given to Father Lockhart, who, like the Cardinal, was a convert from the Church of England, or to Dr. Vaughan, the Bishop of Salford, who was educated at the Jesuit College of Stonyhurst, and is the proprietor of the Tablet.

Dear old Gregory Lockner of Ober-Ammergau, the Judas Iscariot of the Passion Play, is dead in his 82nd year, says the London Universe. He was one of the best Catholics—which is saying a good deal—in that happy village, and a really skilful wood carver. A full length picture of himself in the role he made famous, executed in pear tree by his own hands, is at our elbow as we write. We lodged with him for a week in 1880, and shall never forget how the gracious patriarch wept when an American visitor said he must be a bad character to give such a life-like rendering of his part.

A Rome despatch says that King Humbert is known to have already made advances indirectly to a number of Cardinals to sound them on the possibility of electing a successor to Leo XIII., who would be willing to make peace with the Italian monarchy. The King strongly feels the painful features of the existing situation. He is himself of a religious turn of mind, a genuine Catholic in his belief, only limiting his Catholicity at the question of temporal power. He would be willing to enlarge somewhat the area of the Vatican jurisdiction, but not to surrender Rome which he regards as the heart and brain of Italy.

Speaking of the supposed losses of the Catholic Church in England Father Vere of St. Patrick's Church, London, says: "Catholics of to-day are reading startling accounts of the leakage of the Church. I do not put much faith in these statements, as from statistics it can be proved that the Church is not losing thousands every year as reported by some. I can only say this much, that during the twenty-five years and more that Cardinal Manning has ruled the Archdiocese of Westminster, there has been between thirty and forty thousand converts. In spite of the almost wholesale emigration which took place in the early years of the Cardinal's episcopal rule, the number of people who came to their religious duties and the number of children has more than doubled.

A French Police Magistrate has been making a careful inquiry into the effects of the rapid development of the educational system in France during the last decade upon crime. His facts are startling. At the present time it would be difficult to find an entirely illiterate person between the ages of 10 and 20 years. Yet there is an increase of arrests out of proportion to the increase of population, and an increasing proportion of convictions to arrests. Suicide has increased 55 per cent in ten years, while the population has increased at the rate of one-fourth of 1 per cent. The number of crimes whose authors remain unknown has increased amazingly—a significant commentary upon the growing intelligence of the people. The most harrowing figures are those relating to children. The number of juvenile criminals has not only largely increased, but while fifteen years ago the proportion was 38 per cent illiterate, it is now 22 per cent—showing the utter inadequacy of mere education as a restraining agency. These results are traced by the French religious press to the exclusion of religious instruction from the public schools.

Father Fidelis, Provincial of the Passionist Order in Buenos Ayres, visited Boston lately. Father Fidelis was a Cambridge boy, and probably some of our readers will remember him as James Kent Stone. He was a brilliant and handsome young man, an oarsman and an athlete, of very winning manners, and with a remarkable influence over young men. He became President of Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., and was evidently on the way to honors and distinctions, when he suddenly became converted, gave up his position and his brilliant prospects, and became a Passionist monk. He has been in South America for eleven years past, working in the cause of the true faith. The Passionist Mission in Buenos Ayres is very flourishing. It is designed chiefly for the English-speaking Catholics of the region, but the church is crowded to the door every Sunday with worshippers of every race. Some of the richest and most influential Catholics in the Argentine Republic are of Irish descent, and they retain the faith and give liberally to the cause of religion. The Fathers are building a fine church which will cost about $200,000; the piety of the people is increasing and the mission is most successful. Father Fidelis takes with him upon his return several young men joined the Order, and who wish to work in that field. He himself has crossed the ocean some sixteen times, and has also made the difficult and perilous journey across the Andes Mountains, from Chili to Buenos Ayres.

Going to be a Dandy.

GRIP'S COMIC ALMANAC for '92 will be the thirteenth issue of that popular annual, and the publishers have determined that it shall break the record for brilliancy, humor, and typographic beauty. Amongst the features of it will be a double page Cartoon, entitled "The Dicken's Christmas Party," in which a large number of our public men will figure in more or less appropriate characters, from the works of the great novelist. Special illustrations are being prepared for the Almanac by Mr. Wm. Bengough, Mr. S. J. West, Mr. E. S. Bisbee, Mr. Chas. Brighton, Mr. Bert Thompson, Mr. C. W. Bradley, Mr. A. H. Howard, and many other artists, and the letterpress will be, as usual, of a light and amusing character. The work is to be brought out in the highest style of the printer's art, though there will be no increase in price—10 cents. Keep GRIP'S forthcoming ALMANAC in mind. It will be out sometime in November.

The Young Recruits.

"The Young Recruits" is the title of an oil painting by Mr. Charles Patterson, one of the most gifted representatives of the younger branch of Canadian artists. Mr. Patterson has displayed undoubted genius in the composition and execution of this charming picture, which will appeal to every lover of childhood as well as every lover of art. "The Young Recruits" is one of the four supplements to be given away with the Christmas number of the DOMINION ILLUSTRATED, which the publishers are sparing neither pains nor expense to make the most magnificent holiday souvenir ever issued in Canada and far surpassing even their own brilliant effort of last year.
