The GENTLEMAN

"No, no; Mr. F., I don't do business in that way, I shall be satisfied with ten per cent." It was so settled. I then led him out into the street, impelled to tell him the news, yet dreading the effect; not daring to make the revelation in my office, for fear of a scene.

I began hesitatingly, 'Mr. Fitz-Roy, I am happy to say that I find you are entitled to . . . ten thousand pounds!" "Ten thousand pounds!" he echoed. "Ten thousand pounds!" he shrieked. "Ten thousand pounds!" he yeiled; seizing my arm violently. "You are a brick-Here, cab! cab!" Several drove up-the shout might have been heard a mile off. He jumped in the

"Where to?" said the driver. "To the tailor's, you rascal!"

"Ten thousand pounds! ha, ha, ha!" he repeated hysterically, when in the cab; and every moment grasping my arm. Presently he subsided, looked me straight in the face, and muttered with agonizing fervor, "What a jolly brick you are!"

The tailor, the hosier, the bootmaker, the hair-dresser, were in turn visited by this poor pagan of externals. As by degrees under their hands he emerged from the beggar to the gentleman, his spirits rose; his eyes brightened; he walked erect, but always nervously grasping my arm -- fearing, apparently, to lose sight of me for a moment, lest his fortune should vanish with me. The impatient pride with which he gave his orders to the astonished tradesmen for the finest and best of everything, and the amazed air of the fashionable hair-dresser when he presented his matted locks and stubble chin, to be "cut and shaved," may be acted-it cannot be described.

By the time the external transfor mation was complete, and I sat down in a cafe in the Haymarket opposite a haggard but handsome thoroughbredlooking man, whose air, with the exception of the wild eyes and deeply browned face, did not differ from the stereotyped men about town sitting around us, Mr. Balinos Fitz-Roy had already almost forgotten the past. He bullied the waiter, and criticised the wine, as if he had done nothing else but dine and drink and scold there all the days of his life.

Once he wished to drink my health and would have proclaimed his whole story to the coffee-room assembly, in a raving style. When I left he almost wept in terror at the idea of losing sight of me. But, allowing for these ebullitions-the natural result of such whirl of events-he was wonder fully calm and self-possessed.

The next day, his first care was to distribute fifty pounds among his friends, the cadgers, at a "house of call" in Westminster, and formally to dissolve his connection with them; those present undertaking for the "fraternity." that for the future he should never be noticed by them in public or private.

I cannot follow his career much further. Adversity had taught him nothing. He was soon again surrounded by the well-bred vampires who had forgotten him when penniless: but they amused him, and that was enough. The ten thousand pounds were rapidly melting when he cited and flushed, he rose with a much for me, if I had not made the invited me to a grand dinner at Richmond, which included a dozen of the Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. If you take two cups of granulated su-gar, add one cup of warm water, and stir about 2 minutes, you have as good syrup as money could buy.

If you will then put 21/2 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup, you will have as much cough syrup as you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly.

He was dead!

I am an attorney and a bill-discounter. As it is my vocation to lend money at high interest to extravagant people, my connection principally lies among "fools," sometimes among rogues "of quality." Mine is a pursuit which a prejudiced world either holds in sovereign contempt, or visits with envy, hatred, and all uncharitableness: but to my mind, there are many callings, with finer names, that are no better. It gives me two things which I love-money and power; but I cannot deny that it brings with it a bad name. The case lies between character and money, and involves a matter of taste. Some people like character; I prefer money. If I am hated and despised, I chuckle over the "per contra." I find it pleasant for a member of a proud aristoracy to condescend from their high state to fawn, feign, flatter; to afect even mirthful familiarity in order to gain my good-will. I am no esiring either his flesh or his blood. entimental vengeance is no item in ly stock and trade. Gold and bankbe a good mortgage. Far from seeking revenge, the worst defaulter I ever had dealings with cannot deny that I am always willing to accept a good post-obit. I say agan, I am daily brought in contact with all ranks of society, from the poverty-stricken patentee to the peer; and I am no more surprised at receiving an application from a duchess than from a pet opera-dancer. In my ante-room wait, at this moment, a crowd of borrowers. Among the men, (beardless folly and mustachioed craft are most prominent,) there is a handsome young fellow, with an elaborate cane and wonderfully vacant countenance, who is an ticipating in feeble follies, an estate that has been in the possession of his ancestors since the reign of Hanry he Eighth-there is a hairy, highosed, broken-down nondescript, in ppearance something between orse-dealer and a pugilist. He is an old Etonian. Five years ago he drove is four-in-hand; he is now waiting to eg a sovereign, having been just dis charged from the Insolvent Court for he second time. Among the women pretty actress, who, a few years since looked forward to a supper of steak and onions, with bottled stout on a Saturday night, as a great trea! now finds one hundred pounds nonth insufficient to pay her wine nerchant and her confectioner. I am obliged to deal, with each case acording to its peculiarities. Genuine ny door. Mine is a perpetual battle with people who imbibe trickery at he same rate as they dissolve their ortunes. I am a hard man, of course. I should not be fit for my ursuit if I were not; but when, by remote chance, honest misfortune pays me a visit, as Rothschilds ámused himself at times by giving a begga dressed dandies of London, intera guinea, so I occasionally treat my spersed with a display of pretty butself to the luxury of doing a kind ecterfly bonnets.
