CHAPTER VII.

"Oh, lots. And a precious lot, too. There's one of them, now," said Frank pointing to a hump-backed, idiot-looking boy who approached them holding a brace of partridges. "Hello, Dickie! Where are you bound for?"

"There," said the lad, pointing with a nod and a grin toward Fontelle.

"Who are the birds for?" said Frank, attempting to look at them.

"You let 'em alone!" said Dickie, dodging back and assuming a belligerent attitude. "They're for her—Miss Jack; you let them alone—will you?"

"All right," said Frank, laughing. "No on, Dickie. Give my compliments to the town pump the next time you see it."

"And that's one of her proteges?" said Disbrowe, glancing carelessly after him. "How come Miss Jack to adopt that picture of ugliness?"

"Well, thereby hangs a tale." It was one day, about two years ago, Jack was down to Green Creek; and passing by a tavern, he saw a lot of rowdies and loafers crowding around poor, silly Dickie, laughing, taunting, jeering, and kicking, and pulling, and hauling the poor fellow until they had him half-maddened. Jack dashed on the scene, and they fell back but one half-tipsy fellow, who seized her by the arm in threatening manner. With a perfect shriek of passion, Jack sprang back, and dashed her hand in his face with such force that, big as he was, he reeled back, and saw more stars. I reckon, than he ever saw before. Dick had taken to his heels the moment he found himself free; so Jacketta, having stopped to assure that once more that they were a set of low, mean, cowardly knaves to so abuse Dickie, took her departure, browe. Softened and tender his thoughts of her grow, until his cheek flushed, and his eye fired, and his pulses bounded, and he drew a long, quivering breath, and he wished from the very depths of his soul she were an heiress, with a rent roll of twenty thousand a year, that he might dare to love her. As it was, he might as well venture to fall in love with the moon, for all hope he ever could have of marrying her.

"That's the worst of it with poor devils of younger brothers, like me, without a rap to bless themselves with! What a pity it is a man dare not do as he pleases! If some kind fairy could give me fifty thousand pounds this moment, I believe, in my soul, I would marry the girl, if she would have me, in spite of fate and—Norma Macdonald!"

An hour after dinner Jacquetta and Disbrowe set out for a stroll.

"Do you know what I was doing this morning?" said she, as they walked along.

"Well," said Disbrowe, "I don't pretend to divination but I think I can guess. You were, most probably, sitting beside your handsome patient."

"Exactly! You are as smart at guessing as a Yankee. But I was doing something more. I was reading a story of a young nobleman who fell in love with a peasant girl—one of his father's tenants—and she fell in love with him."

"A peasant girl! What a precious fool he must have been!" said Disbrowe, sotto voce.

"Well, his father heard it, and raised no end of a row. In vain the lover pleaded; the old gentleman was inexorable—wouldn't be brought to view matters in their proper light at all, and ended in banishing his son from home; and when he got him away, compelling the girl to marry somebody else."

"Well, I dare say she was willing enough," said Disbrowe; "girls generally are to get married. What did the fortunate young gentleman do when he heard it? Married some Lady Seraphine Ann, I suppose."

"No, sir! he died of a broken heart! What do you think of that?" said Jacquetta, triumphantly. "Now what would do, Cousin Alf, for a woman you loved?"

"Something better than break my heart, I should hope."

"Are you quite sure you have one to break? Would you risk your life for her?"

"No; something better."

"Die, then?"

"Die?—not I! Better still."

"What then? I give it up."

"Make her Mrs. D."

"That would be a climax of happiness, certainly! Oh, the self-conceit of man! And so that is all the extent to which your gallantry would carry you, is it?"

"Ah, ma belle, what would I not risk for you?" said Disbrowe, softly, with his handsome eyes fixed on her face.

Jacquetta laughed. "Dreadfully obliged, I'm sure! And here goes to test that declaration. Climb up there and bring me those flowers."

A huge, steep boulder, almost perpendicular, reared up near them, and at a dizzy height from the ground a cluster of pretty pink flowers grew in a cleft. Jacquetta pointed to these, and said, imperatively, "Climb!"

Had she told him to spring into the seething crater of Mount Venus in that tone, he would have obeyed. Before the word had well passed her lips, he was already on his way up the steep.

He reached the cleft at last, seized the flowers, and prepared to descend; but—alas for his knight-errantry!—the treacherous stone on which he stood gave way, and the next instant he lay stunned and motionless on the ground.

With a great cry, Jacquetta sprang forward and bent over him. Without sign of life he lay, and kneeling beside him, she raised his head, crying out in tones of passionate grief:

"Oh, Alfred! Cousin Alfred! look up speak to me!—say you are not hurt! Oh, he is dead! and I have killed him!"

She bent over him as he lay, cold and still, and her lips touched his cheek. The next instant, she recoiled in terror at the hot rush of blood that followed that slight caress.

MARVELS OF THE PANAMA CANAL.

Among the great engineering feats of modern times none ranks higher than the cutting of the Panama Canal, the tenth anniversary of the completion of which is celebrated this month. The achievement marked the climax of a series of projects extending over some hundreds of years.

The Panama Canal had its origin with the Spanish navigators of Columbus's time, when expeditions sailed from Europe in an endeavour to find a way through the American Continent from the Pacific Ocean to the Caribbean sea.

By 1520 these navigators had come to the conclusion that there was no natural waterway to afford passage for ships, and that the only means of sailing from one sea into the other was by making the longer voyage either round the northern or southern parts of the continent. The possibility of building a canal was thus raised at this early period, and many plans were considered.

Threatened With Death.

In 1550 a Portuguese navigator, Antonio Galvao, published a book on the subject, and a year later a noted Spanish historian urged the king to assent to the plan. The idea, however, was opposed by the Government, and all attempts to promote a canal were suppressed by law, under penalty of death, the proposal thereafter remaining in abeyance for over two centuries.

Survey work was resumed in 1771, but knowledge of the country through which the canal was to pass was so vague that nothing could be done. It was not until forty-five years ago that the idea began to take definite shape, the completion of the Suez Canal, and its success as a commercial enterprise, focusing increased attention on the Panama project.

The first effort to float a company failed; the second attempt brought a response of 5,000,000 francs, the promoters being French, and preliminary work was carried out. But so ill-managed was the scheme that the company became bankrupt and all work ceased.

Towed by Electricity.

Thirty years ago a new company was formed, and the canal began to materialize. Incidentally, the fact that the work was controlled by Europeans caused great dissatisfaction in America, and an opposition company was formed to drive a second canal through Nicaragua. The excavations for this were actually begun, until financial troubles ended them and drove the company into liquidation.

After many other crises the canal was finished under American auspices in 1914, being opened for traffic two weeks after the outbreak of war. The bill for the work totaled £100,000,000, as against the £19,000,000 for the Suez Canal. The Panama Canal is forty-one miles long from shore to shore, its minimum width being 300 ft. and its

98 OUT OF EVERY 100 WOMEN BENEFITED

An Absolutely Reliable Statement Important to Every Woman

Remarkable Results Shown by a Nation Wide Canvass of Women Purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. 50,000 Women Answer

For some time a circular has been enclosed with each bottle of our medicine bearing this question: "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

Replies, to date, have been received from over 50,000 women answering that question.

98 per cent of which say YES. That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take the medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This is a most remarkable record of efficacy. We doubt if any other medicine in the world equals it.

Think of it—only two women out of 100 received no benefit—98 successful out of a possible 100.

Did you ever hear anything like it? We must admit that we, ourselves, are astonished.

Such evidence should induce every woman suffering from any ailment peculiar to her sex to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and see if she can't be one of the 98. The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Of course we know that our medicine does benefit the large majority of women who take it. But that only two out of 100 receive no benefit is most astonishing.

It only goes to prove, however, that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure-all—one that is made by the most scientific process; not from drugs, but from a combination of nature's roots and herbs, can and does do more good than hastily prepared prescriptions.

You see, we have been making, improving and refining this medicine for over 50 years until it is so perfect and so well adapted to women's needs that it actually has the virtue to benefit 98 out of every 100 women who take it.

Its reliability and recognized efficiency has gained for it a sale in almost every country in the world—leading all others.

THE GOSSIP.

I passed the home of Rudolph Rife at twilight yesterday; "I saw Ben Cowhide beat his wife," I heard this Rudolph say; the news of such unseemly strife turns all my blood to whey. And so I told twelve friends or more, who raved and tore their hair; I told it in the Blue Front store, and on the public square; and soon the town was feeling sore, that Ben this stunt should dare. Then came Ben Cowhide up the street; he seized me by the nose; "Tell me," he said, "why you repeat this tale of brutal blows I've handed to a wife so sweet she's like a summer rose?" I answered "It was Rudolph Rife who spread it to the gale; I heard him say you beat your wife, as I passed by his kraal; I'd not invent, you bet, your life, so harrowing a tale." "Well, seek this Rudolph," Cowhide said, "and ask him to explain, and I shall overhaul his head, if his excuse is vain, for I, alas, am seeing red, with fancies in my brain." We found at last this Rudolph Rife, upon the windwept lea, where he was carving with a knife his name upon a tree; "I surely said you beat your wife at crokinole," said he. "This gossip who the yarn has spread should not such tales relate; he heard but half of what I said, as he passed by my gate, and if you wish to punch his head, your zeal I'd not abate." And then ensued a beasty row that caused unpleasant din, for Cowhide smote me on the brow, and also on the chin, and kicked me where I hold my chow, and drove my whiskers in.
