Stable of the Tariff "Reformers."

Mr. Winston Churchill, M. P., and the Randolph Hotel, Oxford. Mr. H. A. L. Fletcher, Fellow of New College,

Mr. Churchill said we had every reason to congratulate ourselves upon the position of the free trade controversy at the present time. He was always ready to accord sympathy to the unfortunate. He thought tariff "reformers" were the most unlucky people the vorld had ever seen. They had a very declared to win on one horse and then on the other, and sometimes they had declared to win on two horses in the same race at the same time, but they had never succeeded in pulling off a selling plate. The only people who had been sold were those who accepted their views. (Laughter.) We were told that our exports were in a state of stagnation. An examination disclosed nearly twice as much as the people of the United States or Germany, and more than twice as much as the people of France were able to export. When we were told that our exports were stagnant, by a singular perversity of fate they immediately bounded up far beyond what any free trader could ever have hoped for

The Fear of Losing Our Colonies.

Then we were told that unless tariff "reform" were adopted we should lose our colonies. We had not seen fit to adopt that policy, and so far from losing our colonies the British Empire was never more closely knit than at the present. (Cheers.) Not only had radeship and loyalty in the naval aid shove them on to the necks of their were willing to send us, and for which there was not a man worthy the name of Englishman who was not grateful, we had succeeded in bringing South Africa effectively into the great circle of the British Empire, and that had been brought about by that Liberal genius which was cognate with that which called into being the great free in for an epoch, not of panic building, trade philosophy. Tariff Reform and Unemployment. Then another of these sorry bobtailed crocks which was started out was out recourse to loans, which impaired that tariff "reform" would stop unemployment, and there would be work for ployment, and there would be work for all. In Germany and the United States affecting the status of any class in the unemployment had become one of the country, we should be able first questions of public concern. It was an evil of civilization and of the organization modern economic states. We were told that tariff "reform" would stop fluctuation in trade and commerce, and yet we had seen that fluctuations in Germany had been much greater than the fluctuation here, and the fluctuations in the United States a year and a half ago caused the virtual suspension of cash pay ments altogether. We were told that This Is the Season When the great firms and trusts in the United States had been able to avoid dis charging men, but anybody who chose to read the annual report of the United States Steel Corporation would see that substantial economies had been that question with some anxiety.
