Base Ball Yarns By Billy Evans

Time and again during the past twelve months I have been asked this question. It is strange that so well known a character could drop from sight so quickly. Scarcely two years ago he was one of the most talked of men in baseball.

sight so quickly. Scarcely two years ago he was one of the most tarked to men in baseball.

Tim Hurst is a resident of New York. Although born at Ashland, Pa., he has lived in Gotham so long, that residing in any other city would be camping out. For 20 years he has lived at the Bartholdi Hotel, of which he is regarded as one of the props.

And don't imagine that Timothy (who lost his American League job for mistaking the face of Eddie Collins for a cuspidor), needs sympathy. He is worth about $100,000, and it isn't stage money, either. His bank roll is probably larger than that of all the major league umpires combined. He is a sport promoter, boxing referee, and will umpire when the offer is attractive. And he is a real estate dealer extraordinary.

I met Tim on Broadway last summer and enjoyed a chat with him. Tong Tom" Hughes, Washington pitcher, joined us, and we talked show with Tim doing most of the chattering. When he left, Hughes related a story of him. I tell it in Hughes' words:

"You remember the old Wash-ONE OF TWOSE."

"Hurst was umpiring, and naturally I was sore at the mailing I was getting. I made the mistake of trying to take revenge on Hurst. I might have had a chance with an average umps, but not with Timothy. I commented on his umpiring, and he came back sarcastically about my pitching. Finally I turned and said:

"Whos pitching this game, anyway?"

"Well,' he drawled, 'Judging from the score, I should say one of those old fellows from the incurable ward over there,' at the same time jerking his thumb toward the hospital. I was through for the rest of that game, believe me."

Tom Hughes is responsible for another of the many good stories told about Tim Hurst, it sems that a brash young pitcher joined the Washington club, bringing from his small league a reputation a mile long.

The recruit wasn't averse to talking of his ability, and one afternoon while Hurst was sitting on the bench he began to relate the way he used to stand the umpires on their heads in the bushes.

"Any time I wanted a strike called I would simply yell loud enough for the fans to hear, 'How's that one?' Right through the middle,'" was the recipe he gave for obtaining favorable ruilings.

As he concluded his tale of how he lorded it over the umpires, the manager told the recruit to warm up, as he might work that afternoon. Hurst listened to the youngster's monologue with interest, and evidently made up his mind to teach the young man a lesson, for on the first ball pitched, although right through the hear of the plate, as Tim afterwards confessed, he delivered an ultimatum.

"How's that one?" the pitcher demanded, turning on Tim.

Looking him over in the most critical way, Hurst responded: "Under the circumstances it is a ball. If you hadn't been so inquisitive, it would have been a strike."

been a strike."

"And that bit of advice was the best thing that could have happened," said Hughes. "It taught the kid a lesson, and thereafter he confined himself to pitching, leaving the umpiring to men hired for that purpose. Today he is a star in the big league, although not with the Washington club."

No player can bull a ball to left harder than Napoleon Lajoie. When Larry goes to the plate, third-sackers, as a rule, play almost a short left field for him, Despite this, Lajoie seldom resorts to bunting, although he might beat out many with the third baseman so far back.

Soon after Billy Purtell joined the White Sox his team played in Cleveland. Lajoie bunted and beat the throw easily. Purtell had heard much of Lajoie, but never had seen him in action, so decided he wouldn't be shown up by another bunt.

Lajoie, but never had seen him in action, so decided he wouldn't be shown up by another bunt.

When Lajoie again stepped to the plate, he feinted, and saw Purtell coming in at a 10-second clip. The next ball was in the groove, and after feinting, Lajoie pulled the ball to left a mile a minute. Purtell, coming in, couldn't stop. He could not even defend himself, and the ball struck him on the chest, dropping him as cleanly as a hard hook to the jaw.

The story of this experience spread, and the third basemen naturally became gun shy, with Larry up. The psychical influence of the play had its effect no longer than last year, when Lajole and Cobb were struggling for the batting championship of the American League.

In a double-header at St. Louis, Lajoie secured eight hits. Ordinarily this would not have caused more than passing comment, but it was believed for a time the bingles gave Larry the batting honor of the league, and the automobile that went with it.

Five or six of the eight hits were perfect bunts along the third base line mobile that went with it.

Five or six of the eight hits were perfect bunts along the third base line that Larry beat out. Corridon, a youngster, was being tried at third by St. Louis, and the fact that he played a deep field helped Lajoie beat his ows.

The day after the game a newspaperman asked Corridon why he played

The day after the game a newspaper and so deep, and the youngster replied:

"It was the first time I had ever seen the 'big fellow.' I knew what happened to Billy Purtell, and I decided I wasn't going to be crippled for life on the last day of the season. If I had come in on those bunts fast enough to throw him out, it's ten to one he'd have cannon-balled one at me. In that case you might be buying shoestrings from me to help a poor cripple instead of seeing me play hall."

If the Athletics win the American League pennant next year they will, of course, contend for the world's championship again. In this event, I wonder if the old cry, relative to the strength of American League catching staff will be raised? Ing staff will be raised?

When the Athletics met the Cubs in 1910 the catchers were most discussed. It seemed the ananimous opinion that Thomas, Lapp and Livingston were outclassed by Kling and Archer. It was predicted the Cubs would have an easy time on the bases, What happened is history, The Athletics presented the thrills, Thomas and Lapp stopped the Cubs without trouble. Kling and Archer had no more than their share.

Ira Thomas was not spectacular, but he is far above the average as a mitt performer. He thinks and acts rapidly, and this spells his success. No catcher possesses more mechanical skill than Jack Lapp. With more experience he will stand out in relief among the backstops.

It seems to me Lapp and Thomas should receive more consideration if the team battles for the big title. They have proven their worth in two desper-have proven their worth in two desperate struggles.

Connie Mack tells a story on Thomas. While not a tightwad, Ira takes care of his money. He believes that when he is through with the game he ought to have enough to keep him the balance of his days, and not be a subject for a benefit game. Someone asked Mack before the series if he had any fear about Thomas against the Giants. "None whatever," replied the shrewd leader. "You know, there is a winner's and a loser's end, and Ira is bound to be on the long end of the percentage."

Thomas, by the way, has made more money out of world's series games than any other player. He perticipated in the championship battles with both Detroit and the Athletics.
