SATURDAY MORNING, MARCH 17, 1882. CARRYING THE WAR INTO ENGLAND.

The existence in Ireland of some secre ciety or organization having murder fo special object is beyond all question. Any man simple enough to believe that the murders of recent date in Ireland were deeds done by individuals of their own scoord, and without collusion and conspiracy with others, stands in need of being sent to the lunatic asylum or of being otherin this wicked world. The murder of Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke was a startling event, and degree. But that was chiefly e of the distinguished position of the victims, the fact being that there had been scores of other murders, every whit as tates to perform his duty at any time from atrocious, only not so much remarked upon fear of the consequences is not a fit rules because the victims were of humble station. So much for murder, next for dynamite which is intended to include murder, as the greater includes the lesser. There have een threatenings of dynamite for some time past, and things have happened seemed to show that dynamite fiends were "trying their hand at it," to say the least. But not until the other day did anything happen in the dynamite line so serious as to challenge the attention of the civilized world. It has happened at our best to publish a presentable paper, and last, however, and the event is likely to prove something more than a nine days' we are satisfied that the people not only der. The popular feeling on this point has been strong, though still held latent and slumbering through various influences. Chief among these influences has been the ing M. But it is also in great part founded on the merest illusion, the the chemistrate and dist of hard which the sharp impact and dint of hard facts may at any time suddenly dispel.

Our United States friends are making a mountain out of a mole-hill. What may happen in the future no one can say, but at present we can truly assert that there is not a serious thought of annexation among any section of our people. In fact, we believe, wheat from the time when its ancestors first the annexationists in any city in the dominion could be counted on the fingers and toes. We firmly believe there are men in our midst fit to occupy Rideau Hall, and would be rejoiced to see a Canadian drawing the fifty thousand dollars a year and under his constant selection into the golden expenses that the Marquis of Lorne enjoys, but that does not mean annexation.
