Western the particular the particula le we were never fav project of establishing such, especially one for medicine, we must congratulate the promoters of the enterprise on the unturing seal they have manifested in working for its interests. Now it has 50,000, subscribed by English sympath-izers, and a good sum by Canadians, so that by the time of its opening there will be a large sum raised. No doubt it will be for the interest of London to linve a university, but whether the West can sufficiently feed an institution of such magnitude and such expense, with-out confining it to the merest pittance, is yet to be seen. The demand for a mational university is rapidly increasing, ng such, espe nal university is rapidly increase hope we shall soon have o

It is written in such a careful way, that the arguments are cleverly put in the mouths of each party to the discussion, enabling each his opinions. We know of no easier or quicker way of bocoming familiar with the positions taken in argument by the advocates of either theory, than by reading this present work .Good naturedly, yet with 'searching scrutiny, his characters are conducted through his characters are conducted through the labyrinths of discussion, and while we may see from the first the issue of the conflict, the fairness in discussion, and the earnest seeking of truth, is very much to be admired. One thing we much regret and that is, that the dialogue is so brief. It appears to us that on a question of such present interest the author has allowed his arguists to decide the day, with but trying a few of weapons, and without going 'through the whole manual of arms. This is to be said, however, that in so short a space, the whole manual of arms. This is to be said, however, that in so short a space, so good naturedly, and so effectually, has never a treatise been written on the subject of baptism. The passages of scripture and the method used by the advocates of each theory are so plainly suggestive, that as a book of reference, a compendium of facts on this subject it is incompatible. it is invaluable.

There are four grand habits, which, ghtly practised, would be of immen so to us all, namely: Punctuality, a uracy, steadiness, and dispatch; for with at the first we will surely waste not ar own time, but that of other; wi will make mi arious to our own credit and inter at which others have committed to arge; without the third we can percorrectly ; and with incement which can practise these a it is necessary to practise these al points, if we desire to be res esteemed worthy of whatever p and esteemed worthy of whatever position we may occupy, and to advance in this life. In order to be good and respectable members of society, we must see that our associates are among those who are good, refined, and intelligent, for if we associate shiefly with those of low character and manners, we need not expect otherwise than to be influenced by them, as many and many a one has been ruined for both iere and hereatter by associating with the rulgar, unrefined and vicious men of this world.
