Russia would have never ventured to cross the Pruth, and to invade Turkey, if she had fancied the mere possibility of a union between the French cavalry at Waterloo and the English Guards.

In all these European historical transactions England has played a part which has disappointed her former friends, and, to say the least, has surprised her former enemies.

But the result of the recklessness of our Cabinets is not even limited to the Crimean campaign, with the loss of all its treasure and blood; the worse consequence of this English fatal story remains yet to be told.

A desirable movement has been set on foot to effect the removal of the head office of the National Bank from London to Dublin, by which a saving of £10,000 per annum will be effected.

The reign of a universal peace can be sustained by a rule of National conduct, as certain and infallible as the prevalence of the scourge of a general war.

Asian universal peace. The peace of all India and China, and France, ensures the peace of the whole world in reference to European connexions; and with these regions secure there is at present no more danger of the sea overstepping her headland barriers and drowning the surrounding states.

If England would prove the sincerity of her conduct towards other nations by showing justice and toleration to Ireland, she would then put on a really new and good character at home and abroad: she would make her parchment laws into records of practical honor, honesty, and public utility; and she would gain in the zealous allegiance and in the remunerative industry of the faithful Irish people more than her past policy has ever been able to acquire.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE. The Very Rev. Jeremiah O'Leary, who is for the last forty-five years in charge of the united parishes of Castleland, Scortaglin, and Cordel, was installed Archbishop of Ardfer, on Sunday last, by the Right Rev. David Moriarty.

The new Catholic church at Tipperary is approaching towards completion, the principals of its high-pitched roof being partially fixed, and the chiselled limestone tower erected to a height of forty feet.

THE HARVEST OF 1858.—The Dublin Mercantile Advertiser states that the quantity of land under tillage this year will be over 20,000 acres more than in 1857. Mr. Donnelly's valuable returns will be prepared and published in a few days.

Mr. Howard, the opulent manufacturer of Manchester, is about to purchase a large property in Galway, and to settle in the town with his nephew, Mr. Lester.

The following we clip from the Limerick Chronicle: Garryowen for Ever.—A gentleman from the South of Ireland, who went in his yacht to see the fetes at Cherbourg, informs us that he was not a little surprised and pleased at hearing a French military band, stationed on the quay, strike up the enlivening strains of "Garryowen-Gloria"; and play them in a beautiful manner.

THE CARDINAL IN IRELAND.—The visit of Cardinal Wiseman to Ireland is one of those events that serve to mark an epoch, and bring into bold relief the character of a Nation. Ages have passed since a Prince of the Church before set foot upon Irish soil; and what great changes and vicissitudes have befallen the world in that long interval!

The following address was by the gracious permission of His Eminence Cardinal Wiseman, presented to him immediately after his conclusion of the sacred ceremonies in the Church of St. Michael's, Ballinacree, on Wednesday, the 25th Aug., the day of his consecration. His Eminence delivered orally his answer to each address as presented:— Address of the Bishop and Clergy of Clontarf to the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster.

May it please your Eminence—We, the bishop and clergy of Clontarf, approach your Eminence with profound sentiments of love and veneration to hail your auspicious coming, and to bid you a respectful and hearty welcome to the diocese which has this day the honor to receive you.

We are proud, too, in the recollection that your Eminence loves our country as that of your family. But, most eminent Lord Cardinal, these are considerations common to us with all Catholics—at least, with all Irish Catholics. There are others that now more urgently demand expression.

Ireland has properly been the first to celebrate the successful submersion of the Atlantic Telegraph.—The Lord Mayor of Dublin has entertained at a public banquet Mr. Bright, the Engineer-in-Chief to the Company. The Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster honored the company by his presence, and charmed the brilliant assemblage by the delivery of a most beautiful and appropriate address.

at the same board with the illustrious Head of the Catholic Church in England. The Freeman's Journal throws the following light upon the subject:— "Rumor, within the past week, hinted that because the Lord Mayor had extended his hospitalities to a man whose genius and acquirements have achieved for him as high a position in the world of letters and of arts, as his virtues and learning have marked him out as fit to hold in the Church of which he is so distinguished an ornament, the Lord Mayor would decline the invitation.

THE BIRTH OF TWO YOUNG LADIES.—An incident of a peculiarly tragic character occurred at Lough Neagh on Friday, whereby two young ladies—the one Miss Maria Hunter, of Newry, and the other Miss Mary Jane Morrison, of Ballyshannon—met a sad and untimely fate. It appears that the two young ladies accompanied a pleasure party on board the Shamrock, a small steamer, from Portadown, with the intention of enjoying a sail and visiting Shane's Castle.

The judgment and discretion of the Lord Mayor were ample security against any cause being given even for doubt on such matters. Indeed, it is but right to say, that no doubt was even suggested, and the sole cause given for the studied and ostentatious absence of Lord Eglintoun was the presence of the Cardinal, and the unwillingness of a member of Lord Derby's Government to sit publicly at the same board with a Prince of the Church, because he also happened to be the Archbishop of Westminster.

EXCLUSION OF CATHOLICS FROM JURIES.—Tipperary has spoken, this week, in strong terms upon the case of the unfortunate Cormacks. The belief in the innocence of the two Brothers, who were executed some months ago at Neagh, is widely spread, and appears to be grounded upon something more than mere sympathy or supposition.

The present moment the fifty or sixty names on the jury panel of the Catholic county of Tipperary include the names of five or six Catholics only, and these usually non-attending jurors; so that, in the words of a resolution adopted at the county meeting at Neagh, on Monday last, "the foremost and available jurors empaneled to try the unfortunate accused Catholic must be, almost to a man, taken from the ranks of a party who has ever manifested the most open and avowed hostility to his class, his religion, and his rights, thereby converting the right of challenge of the accused into a mockery, and his trial by a jury of his fellow-countrymen into a mere delusion and a snare."

Mr. Howard, the opulent manufacturer of Manchester, is about to purchase a large property in Galway, and to settle in the town with his nephew, Mr. Lester. The Limerick and Castleconnell Railway was opened on the morning of the 28th ult., everything working satisfactorily.

Since the late increase in duty on whiskey the consumption has decreased more than one-half; at fairs and races porter is the chief drink; brewers are consequently doing immense business throughout Ireland.

The following we clip from the Limerick Chronicle: Garryowen for Ever.—A gentleman from the South of Ireland, who went in his yacht to see the fetes at Cherbourg, informs us that he was not a little surprised and pleased at hearing a French military band, stationed on the quay, strike up the enlivening strains of "Garryowen-Gloria"; and play them in a beautiful manner.

ON Monday evening, a poor woman, named Margaret Duffy, aged twenty-eight years, was shipped to Belfast, from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, after having first been in the latter place for no less than 24 years. She stated that she lived in Newcastle since she was four years of age that she was married to an Englishman by whom she had two children; that she never applied to the guardians of the Newcastle Union for relief; but her husband having been absent from home some time, she was obliged, being unwell, to apply to the medical officer of the union for attendance; and for no other reason than this she was dispatched in the first vessel, against her will, to the nearest Irish seaport.—Northern Whig.
