

prestige of the League and of the United States demands the development of the severest pressure and the application of sanctions whether a fact-finding commission is appointed or not. . . . . But most important of all is, of course, the necessity of . . . . . establishing the power of the League as a reliable agency to prevent war". The business world in New York has not evolved as far, but even there the drift is toward the League.

5.