Recreation is as neces-sary as creation. A man who man who the boys and girls, said: "The fact cease to is that the melodramas which appeal never rests will soon cease to labor. If Christ were to come among never rests will soon cease to is that the melodramas which appeal labor. If Christ were to come among us what would He do with our amuse-ments? Are we not coming to be a frivolous people? All anusements should be stimulating and not enervat-ing to our physicial natures; they should furnish us relaxation for our minds without vitiation; and should tove a tonic to our nerve energies. Today, a good many of these play Lie who poisons his mind with his rights revel in realistic and coarse pic-pleasures cannot hope to have his mind tures of vice. The moral lesson may pure for his daily tasks. Many pleas-till be there in the end, but the emfor his daily tasks. Many pleas-today are so full of frivolity and sin rather than its punishment." Pro dissipation that people must go home est when their outings, which were bably the most faithful characteriza intended for recuperation, are ended. The evil things we see and hear come been given to us recently by William The evil things we see and hear come back to us to make us evil; as a man Winter, the most distinguished critic back to us to make us evil; as a man thinketh, so is he. We should not seek for amusements at the expense of peo-ple who are as much entitled to rest and pleasure as ourselves. Much of the Sabbath desecration today requires a multitude of worthy people to labor seven days a week. Neither should our annusements be permitted to tresbeven days a week. Neither should our anusements be permitted to tres-pass upon the established principles of right and wrong. Evil is always insidi-ous. Many amusements which are taken into our homes will illustrate the fable of the farmer and the frozen snake. Such poisonous vipers are games used ity, adultery, disease, madness for gambling purposes. A converted murder. There are, of course, for gambling purposes. A converted gambler recently said: "I have been in the saloon business, with a gambling room attached. I do not believe that the gambling den is near so dangerous, plays for which attention has been esnor does it do anything like the amount of harm as the social card party at home. It is made attractive and allur-ing by giving prizes, etc. For my part I could never see the difference be-tween playing for a piece of silver ality is dangled before the public nose molded in the shape of money, and silver molded into a cup or thimble. atre. If you w efface as speedily as possible all quali-ties of conscience, go to the theatre. If said he would not allow himself to be you would be infected with each parti-cular vice in the catalogue of depravity, go to the theatre. Let parents who wish to make their children weary of home and quiet domestic enjoyments take them to the theatre." All persons familiar with the subject agree that the theatre has greatly degener-ated since the days of our distinguished fellow citizen.

The editor of the Portland Oregonian, one of the acknowledged great jour-nalists of this country, a man who does not write from the viewpoint of a churchman, says in an editorial:---"The fact is that the commercial spirit The fact is that the commercial spirit has taken possession of the dramatist and box-office. The only question ether one cares to ask is, will it draw? To this end we have drunkenness and

To this end we have drunkenness and adultery portrayed as excruciating jokes. Sympathy is courted for the libertines of both sexes, escapades are treated as harmless pleasantries, and complicated situations are created in complicated situations are created in which the sense of right and wrong is hopelessly confused. Every play in which the motive power turns about the serual passion is indecent. Every play where wrong is gilded over with wit, humon and beauty, is immoral. Every play where the marriage is treated as anything else than sacred and irrefragable sets the foundations of society to crumbling."

of society to crumbling." Within a few years the well-known dramatic critic, John Glimer Speed, wrote an article entitled "A Week in New York Theatres." He went each night to a different play, and describ-ed them in detail. Referring to one play he said: "In this play, as in most other English plays of recent years, the complications are brought about by frank attacks on chastity; and the suspense of the play depends upon doubt as to whether the seducer will succeed or fail. The disposition to deal in such material probably to deal in such material probably arises from the fact that we recognize the artistic achievements of the French and fancy that because the French are nasty we must be nasty too, or not be artistic.

After making the point that commo cial and not dramatic considerations control the theatre, he said: consequence is that all considerations of the dramatic art are lost sight of, the high mission of the theatre is de-graded, and the noble art of acting ost wholly neglected."

A few years ago George Bernard Shaw, the playright and dramatic critic, asked the question in the London Saturday Review, "Does the theatre make for good?" This brought forth the famous reply of Clement Scott, of whom it was said, "he knows Scott, of whom it was said, "he knows as much about his subject as any man living." He had been for nearly 40 years a literary critic of the drama, and was said to have had great infin-ence in shaping British opinion. He said that he "was the worse for his thirty-seven years of play-going; that many actors are not good women; that the theatrical profession induces the vain and egotistical that is in all of us, to a degree that would scarcely be credited by the outsider; that whilst the pit and the gallery retain the old failb, the men who write and criticles are free-thinkers; that Ibsen is an atheists and that whilst Cardinal Man-aing 20 one end of the religious scale
