The Whitewashed Stove.

There is a spot in this fair town where gather many minds.

More variant than the flags in port, or than the salf-fraught winds.

That play ping-pong with deep-sea men who seven seas do rove.

To cast all armchair anchor in the lee of that white stove.

The stove has stood the storm and stress of twenty years, or more,
And sent its waves of grateful heat throughout that cheery store,
And its full and rotund stomach hath oft' blushed its reddest when
It listened to the weird sea-tales told by those roaming men.

And Aquarius, the waterman, his frozen pipes doth bring To let the siren in the flue its weird love-

to sea again,
To plenish tank and water-butt of those seafaring men.

The fair-haired men of Norroway, and Sweden, and the Finn,
The dark, swart sons of Raly, the Spaniard's olive skin.
Have called back days of Babel as each with his maisboar strave.
In thilling tales of hurricanes, around that old white stove.

And there be many 'gone before.' No more among the crewfi.

Shall incense from their darkened pipes rise as a zure cloud:

And some were pilots whose last "board" was the fair Barque of Dreams.

God grant they made their final port within Thy beckening beams!

And some mayhaps, in Table Bay have marched ashore to weave
A thread in Empire's cherry web, and some, mayhap, may leave
Their Bluenose bones on some strange strand, or fever-swamp, or grove,
A-many thousand leagues from home and that eld whitewashed stove.

And, mayhap, many now who sit about its ruddy glow
Will scatter far and wide ere yet another year doth go
On Time's bright fyle. And while, mayhap, in other lands we rove,
New faces will shine, glow for glow, 'round that old whitewashed stove!
