FURTHER PROOF. I AM ANOTHER MAN! St. John, N. B., Seph. S.,
A. Chifman Shith.

Dear Sir.—I have suffered for fifteen months with Chronic Rheumatism, and could not find any relief, after trying every medicine that I saw advertised to cure it until I was told about the Diamond Rheumatic Cure. I have used three bottles of this valuable remedy, and now can say that I am another man to what I was. I would advise anybody sufferig with this terrible disease to to try it, and see if it does not on the same for them that it did for me.

Yours.

THE WRONG TRAP. A STORY OF THE STAGE.

"Is that your girl?"

"Is that your girl?"

"That's mine. Lora with an o, not your common au."

"Oh," said the clown reflectively,

"Hightalian, I suppose?"

"She passes for a Hightalian, butshe's English. She's billed as Lora Lorini."

The two friends shook hands and parted as the "City of Lushington" began to receive an incursion of its usual frequen-ed as the "City of Lushington" began to receive an incursion of its usual frequenters.

II.—PUDSON'S STORY.

I am lying here on this bed helpless. I shall not die yet, the doctor says; the hones are setting, and in a few weeks I may be out again; but I shall never be fit for the clown's business any more. This misery and suffering I have brought upon myself; i has been the result of my own wicked animosity—the consequence of a jealousy which urged me into crime. I will tell you how it came about.

I joined the Forum Company this last winter when Smithers and I were engaged for the pantomine. To my surprise I found that the girl to whom I had been paying addresses—Mary Morris by name—was engaged for Columbine. To my surprise I found that the girl to whom I had understood from Smithers that some sweetheart of his named Lora Lorini was going up to her I said: "Mary, my dear, this is good luck; but I thought the Columbine was to be Lora Lorins."

"So she is," she auswered.

"What, then, are you to be? Harlequin, or some nousense of that sort?"

"No—Columbine."

I stared at her, utterly ignorant of her meaning.

I stared at her, utterly ignorant of

I stared at her, utterly ignorant of her meaning.

"Don't you know," she went on, "that my professional name is Lora Lorini?"

I was staggered.
"But, Smithers," I cried—"Smithers claims Lora as his girl? Surely, Mary, you have not been playing both of us false?"
"His girl, indeed! Neither his nor yours, if it comes to that, unless you keep a civil tongue in your head. Can't a girl have more than one admirer, I should like to know?"
"She may have a dozen admirers, but she cannot have more than one p.ighted lover, if she has any sense of decency."
Mary turned on her heel and flounced off. I noticed during the rehearsals how she devoted herself exclusively to Smith ers, while I never got a word. There came a bitter, gnawing pain at my heart at being treated so—a hunger to be revenged on him and her. Many a time I had it in my mind to stick my clasp kni'e into his throat; but the attempt was too risky; it might have failed, and I should infailbly got averset of the intervent of the control of the con

Into his throat; but the attempt was too risky; it might have falled, and I should infallibly get arrested for it.

I brooded over a subtler revenge; but first I took Mary aside. "I want to speak to you," I said.

"I don't want to speak to you," she saucily answered.

And this time it was I who turned on my heel and left her.

This was on the 27th of December, the scond night of the pantomime. At the fall of the curtain I sought out Smithers, and said, "See here, George, I've thought of a bit of business in that scene before the barber's shop. I get hold of your hand, you stand there so—now do the shivery shaky business while I tickle you up with it. Now you regain it—force me back—and I fall into a huge pot of bear's grease."

back—and I fall into a huge pot of bear's grease."

Smithers agreed. What deep design underlay this fooling? Will you see.

The next night, just before the scene was to be enacted which we had planned, I stole down under the stage and unbolted a trap on the spot where I intended Smithers should stand. In the midst of his harlequin play I resolved to push him on this pitfall, that he might precipitate himself down and break his limbs or his neck.

Cautions: y I stole back sgain and our interlude commenced. After allowing him to quiver and wriggle in his spangles while I shook the baton over him, I plac-

THE invention of the paper collar was positive benefit to the world, furnishing it did, a neat, elean, and most economical art of apparel. But it never did answer all the puposes for which it was designed, owing to the rail nature of the material. The problem haven to make a cloth collar as cheap as paptant would last longer and could be made a ways fresh and bright. The new "4" cells now upon the market, fills these requirement per cetly. It is made entirely of cloth, three thicknesses being used; it so cosely resembles the finest linen that it might be sold anywhere folinen; and, no matter how much it may be soil did, it can be cleaned and made as bright as every by the application of a damp sponge or cloth.
