Men Who "Cobble" Warships.

How Our Naval Divers Go Down to Repair Our Damaged Fighting Ships.

Our naval gunners do mighty work, but we also require seamen able to walk the sea floor to keep the ship clean below the water-line, and to repair the accidents of battle. Each of our battleships carries eight trained divers and each cruiser four; these men are giants physically, and get high pay.

Let the ship be rammed or badly holed in action below the water-line, and the diver calls for his dressers, for he's now the star actor of a drama which may turn into tragedy involving a thousand lives.

And he has need of dressers. Here are stockings and more stockings, thigh-high boots, and yet more after them! Here's underclothing and more and more, with jerseys on top and sweaters over them. His lead-soled boots weigh forty pounds, and there's a suit made of rubber and leather, with great gauntlets and waterproof joints. Now come the corselet and shoulder-pads, all shining copper and steel—our knight of the sea keeps his esquires busy. Other attendants are getting out his air-plant, his pump and pipes and lines, which are made fast to a huge copper helmet with plate-glass windows—a thing warranted to frighten the hungriest shark that ever vexed the worker in the depths.

Scrapes the Barnacles Off.
The dressing takes long to write, but it moves, as things do in our Navy, with astonishing speed. Here's the portable telephone and the electric searchlight, and thus, completely equipped, the diver goes over to report the damage.

Even in port the "cobblers" goes below and scrapes the cruiser's bottom, a process which may add a couple of knots to her speed and make all the difference between safety and capture or destruction at the hands of an overwhelming force.

For this work scaffolds are rigged up and boats launched with a panoply of steel brushes and other gear which tears off the barnacles and weeds that incrust the steel hull, perhaps thirty feet down in the green waters. This is no work for the weakling or the tippler. The would-be diver must be a superb specimen; a clean and sober liver, for the pressure of water at great depths is fearfully trying to heart, lungs, and stomach. Think of eighty pounds on every square inch of the body! From such a depth the man must be hauled up slowly so that his vital organs may adjust themselves to the relaxing pressure. Bleeding at the nose and ears occurs, and there are terrible risks from sharks and other monsters of the deep.

Where Divers are Trained.
Down at Portsmouth is the queerest "school" in the world where these warship "cobblers" are trained. It's a circular tank like a gas-holder in miniature, with an outside stairway leading to a gallery above. At a height of five feet or so is a range of plate glass windows through which the instructor can put the novice through his slow and ghostly paces.

He is taught to use hammer and chisel, to scrape a hull and recover lost anchor-chains. In six months the man is a skilled artisan under water, and then he's drafted to battleship or cruiser, where he's a privileged person with special pay—a unique sort of "ship's doctor" called into consultation when the steel monster is hit in a vital place, and none can say how long she has to live.

YOUR BOYS AND GIRLS

There are three kinds of round shoulders, the ordinary round back, the round hollow back and the round back due to forward displacement of the shoulders. During the years of growth posture will usually take care of itself, if constant changes are allowed. Change is instinctive and automatic in the child and the varied activities are sufficient to lead it along normal lines.

If, from inherent weakness or the confinement of school life without the relief of games and play, this normal development be hindered, the result will soon show in the spine. The causes of round shoulders are those general conditions which produce muscular or constitutional weakness, like rapid growth; overwork, bad air in schools or home, acute illness, or general lack of exercise.

Round shoulders are not likely to be outgrown, as the victims usually become permanently set in the faulty position, with flattened chest walls and distorted figure.

Plain white linen blouses are often piped with rose.
