Imaginary Quarrels.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Do you ever have quarrels in your mind? A woman said to me once that she found she was wasting much energy carrying on imaginary quarrels.

This is the sort of thing she meant. She would have a certain favor she rather dreaded to ask of someone. She would be thinking about this matter and she would anticipate a refusal. Then she would become indignant at the very thought, and plan what she would say in such case. Next, she would supply the other party's answer, and her own to that, and so on.

All That Bitterness For Nothing. "Sometimes," she said, "I would find I had been quarrelling away in my imagination for ten minutes or so, and I would be really quite worked up and bitter about it all. And then, when I came to ask the favor, there would be no difficulty about it all. And I would have had all that indignation and bitterness for nothing."

"It is a ridiculous habit," she continued, "I'm simply determined to cast it out of my mind. It's had enough to get angry over the things that happen, but over the things that never come, why, it's perfect nonsense."

Is She Unique Or Not? Now, perhaps, the woman's mental processes are unique. If they are, I am wasting words. She should be described in a pathological report, not in a column which is dedicated to everyday human nature.

But somehow I don't feel she is unique.

There is something disturbingly familiar about that habit of forecasting opposition, and then fighting with these ghosts of your own creation.

Anger Dries Up The Fountain Of Youth. Everyone knows it is unhealthy for mind and body and soul to get angry. Anger poisons the system, interferes with digestion, makes wrinkles and dries up the fountain of youth in one's heart.

Of course, this imaginary anger isn't as poignant and painful as the real.

But it's quite bad enough and it is utterly futile. One can usually think up enough sharp retorts on the spot without planning them in advance.

Your Boys and Girls.

Baby's shirts whether cotton and wool or silk and wool, should be washed in water that is not too warm and rinsed in water of the same temperature as the first water. Use a good white laundry soap. Never wring out the shirts, but shake them and hang them so that the necks will not stretch, or put them on stretchers.

Raise out the arms sideways now and then while drying, so they will not get too tight in the armholes. If the mother washes the shirts herself and follows these directions, she will find that a wooden stretcher is scarcely necessary either for the stockings or shirts.

Germany's Strong Friend of Peace.

Much Importance Attached to the Statement of Herr Thyssen That U-Boat Pledge Will be Kept.

(By Ernest P. Horowitz.)
New York, Oct. 20.—On Oct. 13 a report made the round of the New York press to the effect that Herr Thyssen, a Teutonic magnate adverse to a ruthless submarine warfare, had vouched that Germany would keep her pledge, and that he anticipated a hearty co-operation and healthy competition between German and American industries after the war. The assurance is weighty and the declaration significant considering the source from which it comes. Thyssen is the Kaiser's trusted adviser and an honored friend of Judge Gary of the United States Steel Corporation.

August Thyssen belongs to the Lower Rhineland, Germany's Pittsburgh, where he was born in the early '40s. His life story is in some respects akin to the equally uncommon careers of Carnegie and Rockefeller, and reads like a romance of business. The Standard Oil Company is the outgrowth of an original investment of some $70,000. Thyssen started about the same time, in the late '60s, on the much humbler capital of $6,000, with which he built a rolling mill employing sixty workmen. After less than fifty years of labor, he controls the destinies of 50,000 workers and their families. Germany's steel trust, coal syndicate, and pig iron combine, are some of Thyssen's creations. He thoroughly believes in industrial concentration in order to level prices and prevent trade crises. Cheapening the cost of production is his other ruling passion; he calls it the keynote of industry. Until the war, Thyssen mined his own ore, shipped it from far-off foreign ports in his own vessels, hauled it up the Rhine in his own barges, unloaded it on his wharves, and converted the manifold by-products of coal and iron in his works into commodities sold by himself. The annual output of his coal fields amounted to 8,000,000 tons; that of his rock salt fields to nearly double that volume.

Germany came to the trade-front far more through Thyssen's than Krupp's and Ballin's efforts. "The fact that Germany to-day produces twice as much steel and iron as Great Britain," commented the London Daily Mail in the spring of 1914, "is largely due to the principles of industrial concentration and economy of production which Thyssen has inculcated." He regards political combines as the necessary outcome of industrial union, and agreements regulating the prices of the principal staple articles as more vital and valuable than Foreign Office conventions, which in so many instances have proved to be mere scraps of paper. Lord Avebury shared with "King" Thyssen the hobby of "internationalization of commerce," and concurred in his conviction that mercantile antagonism and aggressiveness are the primary fount of all wars, and that, in the case of England and Germany, naval rivalry was bound to follow in the wake of industrial friction.

Thyssen has the true democratic instinct. He abhors all State-sanctioned secrecy, and would like professional diplomats to make room for practical engineers and manufacturers. "If the managing director of some big British shipping concern could be appointed as Ambassador in Berlin," he once said, "or the head of a large Rhenish-Westphalian factory be installed at the Court of St. James's, Anglo-German relations would be permanently on an amiable footing."

Thyssen is a man of few words, but a ready listener. He speaks French and English without a flaw. He is a devout Roman Catholic, and not ashamed to own up to his being "religious." He loves nature, and shuns the smart society set. He resides in a glorious old castle high up on the wooded slopes of the winding Ruhr, whence he directs the busy affairs of his extensive "kingdom." His coat-of-arms bears the self-chosen motto, "I rest I rust." His personal fortune is estimated at $50,000,000, but money means nothing to King Thyssen save capacity to increase his "plant" and power.

"We want peace," he said the other day. "We do not desire to develop our industries by war. It is true that a few of our ammunition manufacturers wish for a long war, but they do not speak for Germany. In peace our relations with America are always most friendly, and we want them to continue friendly after the war."

Pacifists Who Had to Fight.

New York Sun: Washington, eloquently expressing his detestation of war, advised his country, in the interests of peace, to avoid entangling foreign alliances. Lincoln's loving heart was well nigh broken from the horrors of a fratricidal conflict that he had striven for years before his election to the Presidency to avert. Upon Grant's tomb on Riverside Drive are carved the words that sprang from his war-weary soul: "Let us have peace." Sherman, the conquering hero who rent the Confederacy in twain, in passionate revolt at the patriotic duty he had been compelled by circumstances to perform, exclaimed: "War is hell!" Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and Sherman, peace lovers though they were, were obliged, through patriotic motives, to curb their pacific inclinations and wage war, righteous war. The first named wage war to give our nation birth, the last three to the end that our nation might endure.

Fads and Fashions.

Purple and burgundy are among the loveliest of winter shades.

Odd draperies of lace, net or velvet are used instead of sleeves.

Ribbons are playing a more and more important part in lingerie.

Buckles of malachite, topaz or lapis lazuli are much sought after.

There is a tendency toward lighter colors among afternoon gowns.

Sashes of fur are used both on evening gowns and separate coats.

What little trimming is seen on hats is distinguished by its quality.

The warm wool stocknet dresses are decided rivals to those of serge.

The autumn styles for hairdressing are much softer than those just past.

The upper portions of dresses continue to be of some transparent fabric.

Cape de chine and Georgette crepe are both as popular as ever for waist.

Serge and satin are apt to be chosen for the making of fitted dresses.

FURTHER FRENCH PROGRESS.

PARIS, Oct. 27.—French troops made further progress last night in the Verdun region, advancing west and south of the fortress of Vaux, according to an official announcement, and one hundred Germans were made prisoners. German artillery, the statement added, is violently bombarding Chemois wood and fort Douaumont, which were captured by the French in the surprise attack Tuesday night. In the region of the Somme last night the French artillery destroyed a German munition depot near Ablaincourt.

UNDERSTANDING REACHED.

ATHENS, Oct. 27.—An understanding reached by King Constantine and the representatives of the Entente Powers is generally believed to be the immediate result of a conference of the military and political leaders of France and Great Britain at Boulogne on Friday last. The terms of the understanding include on the part of Greece, first, sincere compliance with the demand of Admiral Fournet; second, an effective maintenance of order in Athens and Piraeus; third, a guarantee of Constitutional liberties of Greece.
