READING COMPANY WILL SOME DAY OWN WHOLE COAL SUPPLY

Will Have Anthracite When Other Fields Are Exhausted.

EFFORT TO DISSOLVE IT

Government Renews Action Under the Anti-Trust Act.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—Attorney-General Gregory today filed a brief in the supreme court in his appeal from the decision of a federal district court in Pennsylvania, refusing the Government's plea for dissolution under the Sherman anti-trust act, and the commodities clause of the railroad rate act of the Reading Company, called the "backbone of the alleged monopoly of anthracite."

The combination, the brief says, has a history permeated with illegality and characterized by a deliberate purpose to drive others from the field resulting in increased prices out of proportion to increased production costs. The Government contends in its brief that the Reading Holding Company (the Reading Company) through its subsidiaries, Reading Coal Company, and Reading Railway Company, controls the production, transportation and sale of anthracite coal from lands in the Schuylkill region tributary to the lines of Reading Railroad Company, and that this control was acquired and is maintained by other than normal methods of industrial development.

"With a view to a monopoly," "At the current rate of mining," the brief says, "the coal areas of the companies, thus league and combined to control the production of anthracite, the raising of the age limit from 41 to 45 years, and the combining out of the younger men from employment, are 1,250,000 physically fit who have not yet been drafted into the army. "There can be only one rule for the Allies, namely, to place in the field every able-bodied man that we can afford to raise."

INVENTOR OF TANK HIDES HIS IDENTITY; HAS OTHER PLANS

Is Willing That Credit for Monster Go to Others.

PROMOTED BY CHURCHILL Lloyd George Says Former First Lord Advanced the Idea.

LONDON, Sept. 19.—While friends are claiming for Winston Spencer Churchill, former first lord of the admiralty, and Col. Swinton, the credit for the discovery for the tanks which played such an important part in the recent advance on the Somme front, the original inventor remains undisclosed, but the Associated Press is informed by a reliable authority that the new war machine is an adaptation of the caterpillar tractor. According to this authority the invention was brought to the attention of the war office early in the war. Great Britain declined to finance the project unless the machine were manufactured in England.

These armoured ships on land are mounted on four caterpillar tractors, which not only make the machine incapable of being captured, but enable it to cross ditches. The idea of a machine capable of crossing ditches was first worked out for the last ten years, and the problem was solved finally by equipping the machine with engines of such tremendous horsepower that they are able to pull the heaviest harvest machines and gang-plows over extremely rough ground.

Something Better Yet. The man who brought the plans to England declines to permit the use of his name, declaring that for business reasons he does not desire to dim the glory of those claiming the credit. He says he has plans for a tractor which will probably be more effective than the "tanks."

David Lloyd George in an interview yesterday gave credit to Winston Churchill for his energy and enthusiasm in promoting the interests of the tank, stating that the credit is due him more than anyone else.

The Times correspondent at British headquarters in France, referring to the part played by tanks, says: "In one short hour they did more for the British than the German army in uniform and had greater influence on the war than all the zeppelins have ever done."
