Making Friends With the

Unusual

To-day everyone takes for granted conveniences and services that would have been beyond the imaginings of a few decades ago. It's come to be second nature for us to use the telephone and the wireless, to ride in electric cars and Limited trains, and have our necessities and luxuries brought from the ends of the earth. Another of these unusual, invaluable things that have been accepted as part of the routine of existence is the service given to the people of London by The Free Press' Classified Advertising Section. This most human phase of the business life of the ty serves its thousands of users faithfully and often amazingly-well. Frequently—in the case of recovering lost valuables making quick sales—it accomplishes the seemingly
