

books on the art of teaching for the average Sabbath School teacher that we have seen. Its author recognizes the fact that most teachers in our Sabbath Schools, either have not the time or have not the ability, to master the science of education with the thoroughness expected of a professional teacher. He aims, therefore, at giving instruction in the art rather than in the science of teaching. The volume is intended to show the Sabbath School teacher who has little or no professional knowledge, how he may most successfully impart to his class a knowledge of the Scriptures. This book should be carefully distinguished from "Normal Bible and Training Lessons" by the same author. The latter is a class-book, and may be uninteresting to the average reader. The former is written in a clear and readable style and is quite new.

Letters on Life. By Claudius Clear. Fleming H. Revell Co., Toronto. Pages 277, price $1.25.

Those who have read these wise and witty letters in the British Weekly will be glad to have them in this compact and convenient form. "Conduct," said Matthew Arnold, "is three-fourths of life." In this volume we find many helpful suggestions, full of pith and point, for making life both useful and happy. The writer never forgets that his readers are flesh and blood, living amid the stress and strain of the world's cares and toils. There is inspiration in his words for facing life with courage and cheerfulness and unselfishness.

The Life of Christ. By William J. Dawson. George W. Jacobs & Co., Philadelphia. Pages 452, price $1.25.

Many lives of Christ have appeared, but there is still room for this one. In a series of vivid pictures, Mr. Dawson has presented to us the outstanding events of that life in which the world never loses its interest. The ordinary reader will be grateful for the untechnical style which characterizes this work, and the absence of distracting foot-notes. There is no formal discussion of the nature of Christ's person, but the author recognizes in Him divine and human elements so closely blended that they cannot be disunited. Such chapter titles as "Jesus and the Individual," "The New Society," "One of the Days of the Son of Man," "The Private Life of Jesus," "Missionary Enterprise," suggest to the preacher and Bible class teacher interesting aspects in which the unique life of Christ may be viewed. As an adequate, and at the same time clear and simple treatment of its great theme, this new Life of Christ may be heartily commended.
