

of the Carlist soldiers between meum and tuum are not very clear. As neither of us, unfortunately, could speak much Spanish, we hired a little Basque lad at Hendaye to act as interpreter. He spoke French tolerably is in France, and the other half in Spain, being connected by a bridge across the river, which at this point is only a few yards in width, and very shallow. The Spanish portion of the village had been the scene of an at-

FONTARABIA.

well, and was thoroughly au fait in Spanish and Basque.

Half an hour's brisk walking along the bank of the Bidassoa brought us to the village of Behobie, half of which tack by the Carlists a day or two before. It was the advanced post of the republicans in Guipuzcoa, and was garrisoned by a mere handful of Miguelites, who had fortified themselves in