(1.) Kathie A military schottische, by Arthur M. Cohen, 35c.; (2.) Lancers, All the Go, arranged by Prof. Chas. Bohner, 50c.; (3.) Sounds of Toronto, waltz, by Prof. Chas. Bohner, 60c. These three pieces are Messrs. Whaley, Royce & Co's latest contribution to Canadian music. They will be all favorites with collectors of good dance music. Kathie is an excellent schottische, and both of Prof. Bohner's pieces will add to his reputation.

(1.) Cleopatra Valse for the pianoforte, by Carl Miltner, 50c.; (2.) Menuet, for pianoforte, by J. J. Paderewski, (op. 14, No. 1), 60c.; Yesterday, To-day and Forever, song, words by Knight Summers, composed by Oscar Verne, 50c. In these new pieces Messrs. Suckling & Sons have put the music loving public under further obligations to them. The pieces are up to the usual high standard of the firm which issue them, and they will be easily imported into the music racks of Canadian drawing rooms.

Life Inside the Church of Rome: By the Nun of Kenmare. Toronto: William Briggs. There are a large number of leaks through which the peculiar inwardness of the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical system has made its way, at one time or another, into the outer medium of free opinion and criticism. These vents are mostly the notable speeches or writings of persons who have abandoned the Roman Catholic faith. The most recent of the latter class of utterances is Life Inside the Church of Rome. This book is a merciless arraignment of the Roman Catholic Church, its pretensions and inconsistencies, its doctrines and practices. There is not a single oblique suggestion in the whole book; from cover to cover it is open, direct, fearless. The Irish question, the policy of the Vatican in Germany, the case of Dr. McGlynn, the Clan-na-Gael, Dr. Cronin's death, are adverted to and discussed in their relation to the Roman Catholic system. The chapters on the celibacy of the clergy, the doctrine of infallibility, convent life, the confessional, will open the eyes of a large number of people. The anomalies of the moral teaching of the Church she traces to its artificial theology. Retailers' orders can now be filled at the Methodist Book-Room.

Week-day Religion; Practical Religion—By Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D. Phila. The first of these books consists of thirty two chapters, each in itself a complete essay. Although the essays treat of distinct topics, yet there is but one subject, of which a special application is discussed in each essay, and that is the philosophy of religion. That religion is for a man's every day needs, is the truth that is to be recognized by those who would find out its efficacy as a philosophy of conduct. The book deals with common experiences, for which the highest wisdom is needed, and it points to the sure source of that wisdom in the Christian religion. Important chapters in it are those on The Cure for Care, The Marriage Altar and After, The Beauty of Quiet Lives, Mutual Forbearance, Personal Beauty, The Choice of Friend. The second book, "Practical Religion," is full of valuable lessons. The abstract principles of religion, to which all believers assent, are sought to be kneaded into the habits of action and thought which made up a man's individuality. Such books as this one, if read and pondered, would greatly strengthen religion as the motive spring of all that we do. Self interest, pleasure, health, personal benefit, the approval of friends, etc., are influences that work amid the complexity of motives which control a man's actions in his social and business relations. But religion is not adopted as an hourly sustaining principle. The teaching of "Practical Religion" will do much to import into the routine life of its readers the essence of the Christian faith as an abiding and controlling influence.
