

compliance with the proposals for peace, or sale of lands. She retains the habit of her country women, and is a Protestant.—During the life of Sir William, she was attended with splendor and respect, and since the war, receives a pension and compensation for losses, for herself and her children.

Soon after the arrival of the Protestant bishop, he visited the diocese, and on his way accidentally passed a party of Indians, who recognized their former missionary, the present minister of Kingston, in company with the bishop, and followed them to the inn where they halted. The bishop's attention was drawn to the affectionate meeting of the Indians, and their old friend. This led the Indians to ask, who the bishop was? Being informed, that he was the spiritual guide, who was sent by the Great Father across the water to preach the gospel, and regulate the concerns of religion, they solicited the privilege of making a speech to him, which was done accordingly through the interpreter, in which they expressed their joy and gratitude to God, and their earthly guides who led him to this undertaking. The bishop in return, addressed them, and agreeable im-
