INDIAN FAMINE FEARED

But it is Not Expected it Will Reach Vast Proportions.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3 .- Altho there is a widespread feeling in India that a famine is impending in various parts of the country, Consul-General William H. Michael, at Calcutta, has advised the state department that a famine at the state department that a famine at present could not reach the proportions of those in the past. The worst evils of famine, he says, can be averted, as twenty per cent. of the soil is under cultivation. At the same time there has been very little rain and the gov-ernment is already moving large sup-plies from districts where food is plent-iful to the famine-threatened zones.
