

LIBERAL LAWYERS

said, "but do I understand that you refuse to hear argument from the defense?"

"Yes," the magistrate replied. "Mr. Wilkie continued his fight. 'Don't interrupt,' the magistrate exclaimed."

Wilkie Fights Back

"I do not intend to allow you to override all law and precedent," Mr. Wilkie declared. "A little while ago you refused to investigate Conservative wrongdoing on purely technical grounds. Now, I tell you we want the same show as the prosecution. What a man thinks is not evidence."

Magistrate Gives In

The magistrate stubbornly recognized the objection and went on with this questioning. "Whom did you think the money came from?" he asked. "From the Liberal Club."

"And you don't know who sent it?" "No."

Mr. Stevely denied having been in the East London committee room the Sunday night before the election, with O'Gorman, Lewis, or others. "How many envelopes did you get?" "About fifteen."

"Where the names on the envelopes?" "Yes."

"Did you report the names in?" "No."

The magistrate and Mr. Wilkie again got into a wrangle; his worship accused the lawyer of having interrupted for fear the witness would remember who sent the money.

"To whom did you give the money?" "To Lake and Lee."

"They were done up in bundles for these men?" "Yes."

"And you don't know who sent the money?" "No."

"You don't want to know," said the magistrate. Mr. Stevely indignantly denied the charge.

"There was no prearrangement with you?" his worship again asked. "None."

"Were you expecting the money?" "Well, I knew it was being sent."

"And the voters were expecting it?" "I imagine they were."

"Did you send in any lists?" "Yes. The lists of names made out by Lee and Lake."

"With the amounts after each name?" "Yes."

"To whom did you send them?" "To Mr. McIntosh, I think."

"Who was the messenger you sent with the list?" "His name was Fred Allen."

"Who did you tell the boy to give the list to?" "I can't remember."

"What gave you the idea that the money came from the Liberal Club?" "I had heard it."

"It's a very extraordinary story you tell," said the magistrate.

"Were Lake and Lee the only two men who were doing the bribing on the committee?" "They were all I knew of."

"Did you get any receipts?" "No."

"Did you make any returns to anybody?" "No."

Spied On Liberals

Frederick G. Pugsley was next called. He said that in West London on the 9th of June, 1905, he met Tom Lewis in the Liberal room. Witness had been delegated by the Conservatives to watch the rooms.

"Who did you see go there? Did you see John Stevely there?" "I saw him go there about 12 o'clock at night."

"You saw Tom Lewis there, too?" "Yes."

"And John McArthur?" "Yes."

"And James Cooper?" "The witness then went on to state that he had shadowed James Cooper one day and had followed him from the committee room to Hobbs' factory, where Cooper saw W. J. Day for about fifteen minutes. His story was remarkable in that he told with the most minute detail every move that Cooper had made. After leaving Hobbs' Cooper went to Beiton's billposting agency, then to the Royal Hotel, then to the Tecumseh House, where he lost him. Cooper had spoken to Wm. Empey, a letter-carrier, on his trip down Richmond street.

Cooper had also called on John Producers, and on Mr. Milton, a carpenter. He later went into Adams' butcher shop, and finally to the Liberal rooms. "Did you go to West London to watch Tom Lewis?" "Yes."

Witness then told of following Lewis in West London until 3:30 a.m. in the morning," as he put it.

Dazed the Magistrate

The surprising gibes with which the witness told his story astounded even the magistrate.

"How do you remember all the names of the streets?" he asked, in astonishment.

Mr. Wilkie then took the witness in hand.

The Man From Buffalo

"Who employed you to do this work?" he asked.

"Mr. Doole and the executive of the Conservative Club."

"Who is Mr. Doole?" "He came from Buffalo."

"Oh, he was a detective?" "Yes. He's in Chicago now."

"To whom did you report?" "To Percy Moore."

Badly Tangled

The witness was then subjected to a searching cross-examination as to what Lewis had done on the night Pugsley followed him, and the witness got badly tangled. He contradicted himself half a dozen times in as many minutes.

Then he became very slow in answering questions, and Mr. Wilkie marked that he was not as glib as when he was telling the Tory side.

"I want to see how much of his evidence has been rehearsed," Mr. Wilkie said to the magistrate.

"I don't think his evidence amounts to much," was his worship's comment.

Finally the crowd in the courtroom began to laugh at Pugsley as his contradictions continued.

The witness, in reply to a question, stated that Arthur Essary had assisted him in the work of following Tom Lewis in West London. He was all tangled up, however, as to whether it was on Saturday, Sunday or Monday night Essary was with him. Witness' brother was also with him on the start.

Talked It Over With Judd

Pugsley admitted that some time ago he was up in Mr. Moore's office and had talked over the matter with him. He had also talked with Mayor Judd, of London, about the case.

Pugsley said he had made a report on the work he had done in the election to Mr. Percy Moore. He had read this report on the train coming down this morning, and had refreshed his memory from it.

Robert Hossack was next examined to identify the portions of two $5 bills which he saw in Mr. Moore's office and which were placed in the evidence as an exhibit.

Mr. J. C. Duffield

James C. Duffield, of the City Gas Company, London, was then called.

"Did you give any money to any man?" "Yes."

"To whom?" "Charles Depper."

"How much?" "Four hundred dollars."

"He was a Conservative, and you wanted him to work for your side?" "Yes."

"Where did you get the money?" "Out of my own pocket."

"How did you happen to do it?" "Well, he was working for Gray and I thought he was worth it."

"Who suggested the idea to you?" "I don't know that anybody did."

"Did you tell anybody of it?" "No."

"Did you pay anyone else?" "No."

"Give any other money to the party fund?" "No."

"Did Depper work then for Hyman?" "I suppose he did."

"Did he cut down the majority?" "Yes."

"How much?" "About 40 or 50."

"You told him he would get the money if he did it?" "Yes."

"Did you get an envelope from Wiley?" "No."

"Do you know Wiley?" "Yes."

"It has been sworn there was an envelope left for Tom Lewis and one for you. Did you get it?" "No."

"Collins says there was $100 in it?" "I know nothing of it."

"Did you know men in your place were going to get money?" "No."

"Did you see Lewis or Sifton at your place?" "No."

"See Mr. O'Gorman during the election?" "Yes."

"Did he discuss this matter with you?" "No."

"Did you see Mr. Walter Scott at the committee rooms?" "Yes."

"Talk over the $400 with him?" "No."

"You never gave any envelopes to the men who work for you?" "No."

"How much did you give at the general election?" "About $100, I think."

"To whom?" "To Mr. Reid, I think, though I am not positive."

"You never told Mr. Hyman or Mr. Reid of the $400 you had given to Depper?" "No."

"Just did it for love of the party?" "Yes."

"Did you pay any of the money at the election?" "Yes. I paid part of it."

"What was the agreement?" "If Depper could reduce the Conservative majority by 40 he was to get $400."

"You know Forbes was working hard?" "Yes."

"Did you give him any money?" "No."

"Know of him paying out any money?" "No."

An adjournment was then made until Wednesday of next week.

MR. ASQUITH ON GOLF

The Chancellor on Female Emancipation of the Links.

London, Nov. 2.—The chancellor of the exchequer opened a bazaar at Dundee yesterday, which was promoted by the Scotch Golf Club, Fife.

Mr. Asquith said they were delighted at all times and in all places to see ladies upon the golf links. He had watched there the process of female emancipation going through the successive stages. It began with exclusion, then passed to toleration, and now it amounted to welcome. Some outsiders might wonder that there should be room on the coast of Fife for new golf links, or even for any enlargement of those already existing. The coast of Fife had provided the cradle and the nursery and the training ground from which golfers emerged and conquered the world. He remembered very well, a little more than 30 years ago, the first time he went to St. Andrews with a reading party from Oxford, the surprise and the amazement with which they, English immigrants, watched the natives as they engaged in their strange and outlandish pastime. In the interval which had since passed golf had spread to the utmost parts of the English-speaking world; and only on the previous day he had a letter from a son of his describing how he had just had a round on the links at Khartum. Never, he supposed, in the history of any form of human activity, had there been a case of propaganda so rapid, so effectual, and so complete. Like many of the other forms of human pleasure, golf baffled and, perhaps, defied analysis. There was a famous lord chancellor who once said of one of our English judges that if he had a little more experience he would be the worst judge that ever sat on the bench. One was not to think of golf as the same of golf as one proceeded steadily by assiduous practice from bad to worse. The other day he had calculated that he himself might have learned two new languages in the time he had devoted to becoming a very inferior performer at the game. Yet unashamed and undaunted they went on playing, and, strange to say, they found compensation for much time wasted spent among bunkers and whins in, now and again, that crowning moment of glorious sensation when they found that after all this Brud or Vardon, they were capable of a meteoric drive, or, perhaps, what was still more satisfying, an inspired putt.

The New Coal Company

The Connell Anthracite Mining Company, Limited, whose Canadian head office is at Toronto and yards at Montreal, Hamilton and Toronto, has purchased the coal yard formerly operated by R. E. Clisell, People's Coal Company, from 131 to 141 York street, and will establish a thoroughly up-to-date yard. The Connell Company are owners and operators of one of the most up-to-date mines in the anthracite region. The coal is mined by electric machinery and prepared by a patent pickers' system, which picks out the slate and bone in the coal, insuring a coal as near perfect as possible. Mr. Wheeler, the Canadian general manager, explained to our reporter that his company belongs to no combine or association, and that their intention to maintain reasonable prices at all times. They sell for cash only and their price for this winter will be $6.00 per ton, but in order to get every citizen of London to try their coal they are going to make a special inducement in making the price $6.00 only for the month of November only. Mr. Wheeler stated that they were going to spare no expense to work up a good tonnage in London. They have leased their yard for a long term of years. Their coal is guaranteed to be equal to any hard coal sold, and if at any time a customer should get a coal that does not prove entirely satisfactory they will cheerfully refund the coal at their expense and refund the money for amount taken out.

Their office in London will be in charge of Mr. A. H. Reynolds and will be open for business on Monday morning.

MR. WARDEN'S RESIGNATION

A Minister May Be Given Charge of the Presbyterian Finances.

Toronto, Nov. 2.—The board of trustees of the Presbyterian church have held a meeting to consider the situation of the General Assembly's office, as affected by the resignation of Mr. Alexander Warden, the treasurer.

The matter must be dealt with, of course, by the committee on emergencies, of which the moderator of the General Assembly, Rev. Dr. Falconer, of Nova Scotia, is convener. The committee cannot in any case be called together in less than two weeks.

It is a matter of general regret and surprise among prominent men in the church that Mr. Warden should have taken this step, from which it is stated he will not withdraw. He has been in the office for eight or nine years, and became thoroughly familiar with its business under his father, and he was generally liked by those who had dealings with him.

The statement that his action is the result of his not being at liberty to invest funds on his own responsibility without gaining first the permission of the board of trustees, is said to be unfounded, although it is admitted that some restrictions existed which were not encouraging.

Several applications have been received for the position of treasurer, but so far being from laymen, among them Mr. R. C. Jennings, who applied for the vacant position at the time of Mr. Warden's death.

There is a feeling, however, among a certain portion of the denomination in favor of appointing a minister to the treasurer's position.

When love becomes a circulating medium it ought to have a meter attached.

BABY DEAD; MOTHER CAN'T BE LOCATED

Salvation Army Home Authorities Are Trying to Find Mrs. Nellie Cartier.

Over at the Salvation Army Home, the 14-months-old baby of Mrs. Nellie Cartier lies dead, and the home authorities are scouring Western Ontario and Detroit in an endeavor to locate the mother.

Mrs. Cartier's husband died in London last spring, and the mother supported the children as best she could. Two are in the Catholic home here, and the baby was placed in the shelter several months ago.

Miss Burch, the matron, informed The Advertiser today that Mrs. Cartier is very respectable and always looked after her children. She paid for the keep of the baby regularly, and only left London for Chatham last August. Since that time she has paid for the baby as usual, and once or twice has been to London to see her child. She was working in a millinery store in Chatham, but a few days ago went to Detroit to visit friends. She failed to leave her address, and when her baby took suddenly ill and died she could not be located.

Miss Burch has a letter from Mrs. Cartier, dated Chatham, which arrived yesterday. Miss Burch expects that Mrs. Cartier will see the notice of her baby's death in the Detroit and Ontario papers, and will come at once to London. In the meantime, the burial of the little one is being postponed.

BLUEBEARD OUTCLASSED

Gypsy Vadosch Tortures His Wives for the Pleasure of It.

Geneva, Nov. 2.—So revolting was the evidence given in the trial of a gypsy named Vadosch at St. Gall that the court was compelled to order in an extra force of police to save the prisoner from the wrath of the spectators in court.

He was finally sentenced to ten years' penal servitude and perpetual banishment from Switzerland, for brutally torturing his girl-wife in the heart of a lonely wood. The judge described the crime as the most horrible and repulsive of the present century.

Vadosch was born near Vienna in 1871, of gypsy parents. At 18 he arrived in Germany and married a girl 15 years of age, who died mysteriously six months after the ceremony.

Three days after the burial of his first wife he married another girl, who met with a similar fate after giving birth to two children.

A third marriage followed, and within four months of his marriage Vadosch made a murderous attack upon his wife, for which he was sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

It is not known how many young women he "married," abandoned or got rid of between the period of his release from prison and his appearance in Bohemia last year, when he married a pretty gypsy girl only 16 years old. With her dowry he bought a horse and van, and, accompanied by his sons Popl, aged 15, and Max, aged 13, and some other of his children, he again commenced his wanderings. At Memmingen, in Germany, he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the local workhouse for desertion.

He was liberated on May 14 last, and joined his young wife and children at St. Gall. The girl during her husband's absence had spent the little money he had left her, and all of them were nearly starving. Vadosch celebrated his arrival by beating his wife and children over the head with a stick.

On June 10, at the little village of Murg, on the shores of Lake Wallenstadt, he sent his son Max to buy a pair of scissors, and at 10 o'clock at night he pulled his young wife out of the van by her hair and ordered Max to take a rope and a lantern and follow him into the forest.

There he tied his wife to a tree with the rope and fixed her head by tying her long tresses around the trunk. He compressed her throat until the tongue protruded, and transfixed the tongue to the chin by piercing it with a long needle. Taking the scissors from his horror-stricken son, he cut off the tongue, the lips, the nose and the ears of the unhappy girl.

When some days after she recovered consciousness, Vadosch amused himself by twisting the girl's broken arm and laughing when she screamed.

On July 13 the mutilated wife managed to escape from the van and reach the police station at St. Gall. Her husband was at once arrested.

The woman, who still cannot speak, sat in court during the trial, covering her disfigured face with her hands.
