BURIAL OF THE VICTIMS

Of the Recent Mohegan Disaster-Miss Noble's Story.

simple service at the parish church here yesterday the remains of sixteen victims of the Mohegan disaster were buried in the churchyard. Friends of the drowned passengers have caused placards to be posted at Falmouth, offering large rewards for the recovery of bodies.

MISS NOBLE'S STORY. Miss Katherine Noble, of Baltimore, one of the rescued passengers, whose courageous conduct is highly praised, is now the guest of Mrs. Spry, at St. Keverne. She says that after the shock of the ship's striking she hurried on deck, and found that preparations were being made to lower away the lifeboats. She went to her cabin and got a life-belt and some wraps. When she returned to the deck she was horrified to find that the men were unwomen and children into the rigging, but before it succeeded, the vessel listed, and a wave swamped every-

HER ESCAPE.

Miss Noble added: "Finding that my wet clothes prevented me from climbing, I doffed my skirts and boots. A sailor came and fastened a life-belt around me. The fourth officer then came along and told me to hold on to a hatch with him, adding that help was sure to arrive. A wave came and separated us. I was washed overboard and did not see him again. After a time I managed to grasp a plank, and I clung to it with all my strength. I was washed and knocked about by the sear I could hear others crying as they sank on all sides. I thought several times that I must let go the plank. Then I remembered that the young woman who was saved at the time of the North German Lloyd steamer Elbe, in the North Sea, was

IN THE WATER FIVE HOURS. Surely, I said, if she did that, I can do as much, and at times something seemed to assure me that I should be saved for the sake of my mother, for I am her only child. But for the recollection of the woman saved from the Elbe I do not believe that I could have held on hour after hour. When I had been there three hours a lifeboat rescued me, and I was taken to a fisherman's cottage, where every possible kindness was shown me until Mrs. Spry was good enough to bring me here. I now feel that I will remain here and will not cross the sea again. I am bruised considerably, but otherwise I am none the worse for my experience.'

London's 7th Fusiliers in a Deplorable Condition.

Major-General Hutton Says So Very Plainly.

A Strong Appeal for its Reconstruction-Keep Politics Out-A Rousing Meeting at the City Hall.

city hall at noon today to consider the present condition of the Seventh Fusiliers, and hear the opinion of Major-General Hutton, the commanding officer of the Canadian forces, thereon. The attendance was not large, but representative and enthusiastic. Mayor Wilson presided, and on the platform were Major-General Hutton; his A. D. C., Lieut. Bell, of the Scots Guards; Col. Foster, R. E.; Col. Holmes, D.O.C.; Mr. Charles S. Hyman, Major Beattie, Falmouth, England, Oct. 19.—After a M.P., Col. Leys, M.P.P., Rev. Archdeacon Davis, Mr. C. E. Leonard, Dr. Roome, Dr. Niven and others.

The mayor announced the object of the meeting, and introduced the majorgeneral in an excellent speech. Thirteen years ago, he said, the Seventh Battalion was a credit to the city, but it had sadly declined, and it was not for want of material. (Applause.)

Major-Gen. Hutton was very warmly greeted on rising. He stated that he had come to the meeting upon a rather delicate mission. He had arrived in London in a similar manner to that in which he had arrived at other districts in Canada, and he expected to see in London a magnificent battalion.

Referring to the church parade on Sunday, he said: "From my point of view as a soldier who has served in all parts of the world, I consider a church of national defense of the countrypatriotism-with religion. A church parade, from my experience, if it is largely attended, shows that the men are proud of themselves; they are proud of the position they hold as defenders of the country, and the citizens themselves who witness the parade are equally proud of their representatives. I regret to say that on Sunday your military representatives of the Seventh Fusiliers were absurdly small, and I regret still more to say that I do not think the people who were looking on treated them with such respect as your representatives should receive." (Applause.) Continuing, he said it was unnecessary to comment on the condition of the regiment as he had found it apart from the church parade, but to assure them that as it stood at present it was little less than deplorable. (Applause.) He made an urgent appeal to the citizens of London generally to place the battalion representing this flourishing city upon a footing which was its due. The militia of Canada, he said, should cease to be in one sense a militia, but should become the national army of Canada-an army representative in all respects of the enormous responsibilities which lie in the hands of this young nation. No man could undertake the defense of his country without having very keenly at heart a sense of his obligations. "I mean," he said, "that to be a soldier does not mean to put on a uniform or to do a little drill, but it means to make a solid sacrifice for your hearths and homes. And I wish you here in London to bear very keenly in mind that if the national army of Canada is to fulfill its role in the defense of this country, and possibly take a share in the defense of the empire of which you are a part, and to which we are proud to belong, it is essential that this army should be placed upon a higher plane than any question of politics of political opinion will admit of." (Aplause.) It should, he went on, be independent of politics and independent of any religious denomination, but should represent the Canadian nation as a whole. It was only on that basis that an army could exist and do credit to the country which paid for it and maintained it. (Applause.)

"For a regiment to become a political dumping-ground, or rather political machine," continued the general, "meant the loss of its force, as a mil-Itary unit in the national defense." Continuing, the major-general said he had been assured that no political influence construction of the Seventh. The officer now in command had exceeded the period allowed to commanding officers, and was practically retired. The so that there is practically an open field for the reconstruction of the battalion in the future. He suggested that this work be left to the district commandant, in conjunction with representative citizens. Each district should look upon its representative battalion of infantry as its own child, its own he visited London again he would find the Seventh Fusiliers a regiment of which the citizens could be proud. Linking the name of the regiment with that of the Seventh Fusiliers of London, England, he referred to the many stirring traditions with which the name was associated. Speaking of military sentiment in this district, he said he could not believe it was dead. He aroused a demonstrative feeling of patriotism in his hearers by dwelling upon the past regiment in the country. There was no reason, he said, why the men and officers of the battalion should not be looked up to by every man, woman and child in the city. (Applause.) Rev. Archdeacon Davis' stirring remarks were heartily applauded. There was nothing pleased him more, he said, than the assurance that in the management of the battalion in the future, politics would be buried. There were two places where politics should not enter-the church and the army. (Applause.)

Dr. Roome was heartily in accord with the remarks of the major-general, he said, and he did not hesitate to say that the late government had not done what they should have done by not giving London a new drill hall plimented the major-general on his combined abilities as an orator and a soldier. He considered the citizens of London under a great compliment to Gen. Hutton. Referring to the committee of citizens to be nominated, the speaker felt quite sure no politics would enter their work. Personally, he would work energetically for the improvement of the battalion. (Applause.) He took exception to Dr. Roome's statement that the first thing needed was a drill hall. The first thing needed, in his opinion was a battalion. ("Hear, hear," from the major-general.) Mr. Hyman then moved the following resolution:

"That in view of the representations of the major-general commanding, a committee of citizens of the city London be convened by his worship the mayor for the purpose of considering, in conjunction with the district officer commanding, how best to promote the interests of the Seventh Fusiliers, the regiment of infantry representative of the city, the committe to consist of the mayor, Major Beattie, M.P., Col. Leys, M.P.P., W. J. Reid, J. W. Little and the mover."

Major Beattie seconded the resolution. He emphasized the fact that the moment that politics entered into the management of the battalion, the battalion would go down, and dwelt upon the past glory of the battalion. The motion was passed by a unanimous standing vote.

A vote of thanks to the major-general, moved by Dr. Niven and seconded by Mr. C. E. Leonard, was also passed by a standing vote.

The meeting closed with cheers for the Queen and Gen. Hutton.

CURED LOCKJAW

By an Injection Into the Patient's Brain-The Eighth Case in the World.

New York, Oct. 19.—There was performed in the General Hospital, Passaic, N. J., a few days ago, an opera-tion said to be the first of its kind in this country, and the eighth in the world, the seven previous operations having been undertaken in Paris. It is said four of the seven French cases were successful, and the one just performed promises to nave an equally happy result.

By the operation a young man dying of lockjaw, and whose jaws had been set for days, is now able to eat and to use his jaws with freedom, and has every chance, it is thought, of ultiable to get the boats clear of the ship. parade of the very greatest import mate complete recovery. The operation and attempt was made to get the ance, because it combines the feeling consisted in the injection of tetanus anti-toxine into the brain. Aaron M. Hemion was severely cut by falling through a skylight, and when all danger had passed, lockjaw developed. Dr. Rambard, of the Pasteur Institute, prepared the serum, and it was injected into Hemion's body, but without effect. The young man's jaws remained firmly set.

As a last resort the skull was trepanned on both sides in such a manner as to expose both lobes of the brain. The tetanus anti-toxin serum was then injected directly into the brain tissue.

Almost immediately upon the introduction of the serum into the brain there was a noticeable relaxation of the muscles of the jaws, and the improvement has since been steady and constant. The patient eats and sleeps well and suffers little pain. He will probably recover.

THE CAUSE OF YAWNING. Yawning is commonly caused by temporary deficiency of the air supply in the lung. When the body is weary and in a sleepy condition the process of reepiration is sometimes involuntarily suspended for a few seconds. Nature at once, however, comes to the rescue, and by setting up a spasmodic action muscles of the mouth, threat and chest, produces a deep inspiration, which compensates for the stoppage of the breathing, and is known as a yawn. There is another cause which produces at may be called the yawn sympatic-an involuntary tendency to im-
