THE SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS

The success of Harold Bell Wright's novel, "The Shepherd of the Hills," made into a play by its author in collaboration with Elsbury W. Reynolds has proven just as big on the stage as in book form, it does in the book store. The story of the play is based on a somewhat dramatic plot of mystery. An unknown comes into the Ozark mountains and because of his clerical bearing and readiness to officiate for the regular pastor of the mountaineers, a portion of his disguise is penetrated. The mountaineers who live so much to themselves are willing to let the man live the life of a partial recluse. He makes friends with one family and volunteers for the place of shepherd. In this he attempts to expiate the wrong-doing of his son, who several years previously had come into the mountains and wronged one of the young women. Her father has vowed deadly vengeance on the betrayer of his daughter, but he has disappeared leaving no traces of his whereabouts. It is generally supposed that he is dead. The good shepherd wins the love and respect of the mountaineers, tho at one time his life is endangered by a lawless band of mountaineers who suspect he is a revenue officer. There are many dramatic episodes in the play, but its strength lies in the unfolding and development of its characters. The shepherd is a most impressive figure, mentally and physically. The woman who is the heroine of the story is untrammelled by the conventions of the town and had good red blood in her veins. With the aid of the shepherd she polishes her mind so that she becomes a young woman of culture and refinement. Then there is the young mountaineer whose love is honest and sincere, and who down the champion bully and strong man of the mountains, and is the means of finally bringing happiness to the shepherd, and restoring the good name of the mountaineer's family.

Talk Not Necessary. "Does the boy talk yet?" asked a friend of the family of the little brother. "No," replied the little brother, disgustedly. "He don't need to talk. All he has to do is yell, and he gets everything in the house worth having."
