ACCUMULATION OF CAPITAL

Explains the Features of the Present Financial Situation---Influence of Funds Seeking Investment on Money Rates---Conditions Similar in Europe and America---Bank of England's Discount Rate.

(Boston Transcript.)

The prediction so freely made ten days ago when call money rose to three percent, that the long period of easy money rates was over and that from now on quotations would rule on a higher level, seems hardly to have come true. And yet there can be no question of the fact that public interest in the market has been largely on the increase of late. Bank loans have certainly expanded, the trust companies have come into the market as lenders, large availments have been made of European capital which the foreigners are only too glad to place here at almost any rate—in fact those things have happened upon which the prophets of higher money have based their predictions, and yet the higher level has not been reached. Evidently there must be some great force operating to keep down money rates, some great supply of credit, say those who argue in favor of cheap money rates for a long time to come, which is more than sufficient to offset the increased demands upon capital from both commercial and stock market sources.

That such a force is operative is a matter of fact which cannot be contested, however it may be explained. And in fact the explanations that have been forthcoming have been many and varied. As week after week, however, bank clearings have been increasing all over the country to record figures, and as the stock markets in all the principal cities have risen to a point of activity closely resembling the early months of 1901, without any real change in the level of money rates, the financial community seems to have made up its mind that the real underlying reason for the continuance of cheap money is to be found in the vast accumulation of capital which has taken place during the past few years.

This idea that the ease of money all over the world is due to conditions which have caused great amounts of idle funds to pile up in the great financial centres, is by no means new, and was frequently mentioned during the recent gold export movement to show why money did not rise. As a matter of fact, however, while it was generally understood that cash has accumulated in the reserve centres, there was no way of judging the extent of these accumulations. No new security issues were being brought out, with the possible exception of the Russian and Japanese war loans which were in no sense a test of the investment temper of the general public. That the cash was there was generally believed, but there was no way of telling whether it was available for the new issues until the new issues were either offered for subscription or at least announced.

What has taken place in the purely investment market since the first of the year is too well known to require recapitulation. One huge issue after another has been announced and yet the public demand appears to be unabated, and it is the last issues perhaps more than any of the others which appear to have been most eagerly taken.

It is in view of this fact, no longer a conjecture or surmise, that the opinion has come to be gradually held that money is bound to continue comparatively easy all over the world until something happens to shake the markets out of their present condition. From all the great financial centres comes the same story day after day, offerings of money in excess of the demand. Even during the period of uncertainty to the markets at the beginning of the war was this the case; and notwithstanding the subsequent loans and shifting about of capital, money in Europe has remained on a three percent level or lower, except for a short time in Germany, when end-of-the-year requirements and an artificial jacking up of rates in order to attract gold, put money temporarily on a higher level than in other centres.

To those who have recently been in touch with foreign exchange affairs and have watched the immediate effect on exchange of even the slight fluctuations which have taken place in money rates, it has been quite apparent that an immense proportion of Europe's accumulated capital is at our disposal whenever we choose to avail of it. A week ago the flow of foreign capital into this market was being freely commented upon; and while the easing off of money rates has to a certain extent discouraged lending of this character, the movement has started active inquiry as to Europe's position in case we should find it necessary to borrow abroad to any great extent.

That Europe was willing to lend in this market became apparent a fortnight ago when the slight advance in money here was met by heavy drawings of finance bills. That the great foreign banks are in an exceptionally strong position to extend credit has been made clear by the recent statements they have issued as well as by the reduction in the Bank of England's discount rate last week. According to its last statement the Bank of France's holdings of gold amounted to 2,811,758,000 francs, which is by many millions the largest amount it has ever held. In Berlin the same is the case, where, although there have been times when the Reichsbank has held slightly more gold than at present, bullion holdings are far above the average for this time of the year and place the bank in an exceptionally strong position.

In fact it is impossible to examine the reports of the great foreign banks or to read the trend of comment on the way that the new issues of securities are over subscribed, without coming to the conclusion that abroad as well as here, there are immense masses of capital awaiting a favorable chance for investment. Entirely separate from any desire on the part of the public to speculate, it is becoming more and more apparent that the stability of the present investment situation rests upon this fact, that despite the hundreds of millions which have been put into the new issues here and abroad since the first of the year, people still have money which they want to put into firstclass investment propositions. And furthermore, that they are willing to accept an interest yield which a year ago would have seemed very low.

WISE INVESTMENTS.

Lots of Canadian Money Lost in Unwise Ventures.

(The Trade Review.)

Nowadays when men find themselves in possession of accumulated funds, the fruits of thrift or inheritance, they are puzzled as to safe investments. The specious advertisements in public prints do not help them and they remain dubious.

Lack of knowledge on the part of the people as to how to invest properly the savings that have been accumulated, or the wealth that has been produced, is one of the disadvantages under which the new world suffers. We are admittedly far behind European nations in this respect.

It is undeniable that a far vaster sum of money is annually lost in this country through unwise investment than through pure speculation. Speculative losses often represent the loss of money quickly gained either through former speculation or through other easy means, but the average loss of the investing public is generally a loss of hard earned or industriously accumulated savings.

The possession of wealth is frequently not a measure of the productive capacity of the man, but rather of his ability to invest money wisely. Most of the well-to-do persons are in more comfortable circumstances than their neighbors, not because they have earned more money then their neighbors, but because they put their earnings into something that brought returns. The men of great fortunes of this country are more notably great as investors than as producers. The Standard Oil group of capitalists known as the richest group of men in the world are also the greatest investors in the world.

The future of Canada possesses great possibilities in the way of investment development. The business of the savings banks has only begun. The enormous development of the great mutual life insurance companies, immense and rapid as it has been, is still young. The distribution of securities to holders throughout the country is in its infancy. As the country grows older in the production of wealth, the public will acquire investment wisdom and with it will certainly come the rise of our country to wealth and power.

THE DEAL MARKET.

Fairly Good for Low Priced Deals on the Other Side.

"There appears to be a good market for low-priced deals on the other side," remarked D. A. Watt, manager of the Allan Line's freight department, when asked concerning ocean freights from the Canadian winter ports.

Mr. Watt went on to state that chiefly on account of this freight, business from the winter ports was considerably better than when the ships were transferred from the St. Lawrence to Halifax and St. John last autumn. He said that as yet there appeared to be no great demand for space for the early St. Lawrence sailings. The deal business of the province of Quebec was confined to the better class of lumber, and so far as we could learn, there was no demand for it abroad. There had been no bookings as yet via the St. Lawrence. In respect to grain Mr. Watt stated that he did not anticipate a very brisk season, though, of course, the ups and downs of the grain markets were such that it was impossible to predict with any degree of certainty. The amount of wheat in the Canadian west and in the United States, available for export, did not appear to be sufficiently abundant to encourage the hope of any great amount being sent abroad between the opening of St. Lawrence navigation and the harvesting of the new crop next autumn. Corn promised better, but it remained to be seen whether the prices would be such as to admit of export in any great quantity.—Trade Review.

New York, Mar. 15.—The stock market today opened active and higher with a few exceptions. Ontario and Western and Union Pacific were the features and opened wide. Ont. and Western opened at 60 and then sold at 60⅞ and 60¼, compared with 59⅞ last night, and 6,500 shares of Union Pac. sold at 135⅞ and 136, compared with 135¼ last night. Chicago and Alton rose 1½, Smelting 1¼ and D and C., Ills. Central, Toledo, St. Louis and Western pfd and C. A. R. pfd large fractions.

Honolulu, March 15.—It is learned that some action will probably be taken at San Francisco, after the arrival there of the detectives who investigated the recent death of Mrs. Stanford, in this city. The detectives say, they have received positive instructions not to talk about the case. They will not discuss Prof. Jordan's opinion, that Mrs. Stanford's death was not due to strychnine poisoning.
