BVADED POLICE

THIRTEEN YEARS

Victoria, B. C., June 25—A special despatch to the Victoria Colonial from Hazelton says that at five p. m. on Tuesfaday, George M. Beirnes delivered up to pour character of the control of Alex. Melntosh and Max Leclair, on June 19, 1906. Stewart Henderson, of Victoria, has been engaged for the defence, and on his arrival at Hazelton today he and Mr. Beirnes made a short trip into the woods where Gunanoot was camped and eame back to Hazelton bringing him with them.

For thirteen years, Gunanoot, with a price on his head, has evaded the pursuit of the provincial constables, and in the wilds of northern British Columbia, has not only effectually hidden himself, but has prospered. For the first few years after his sudden flight following the murder, party after party tried in vain to penetrate the country where he was supposed to be. The chase as well as efforts to negotiate with the Indians for his capture failed.

LIME FRUIT JUICE For the Picnic

Don't bother with lemons. Take along a bottle of "Montserrat" and sugar. You can always find a spring of cold water. These are the only ingredients you need to make the most delicious of all satisfying summer drinks.

"Montserrat" is wholesome as well as enjoyable. It is the juice of ripe West Indian Limes—that quenches the thirst and cools the body.

Keep a bottle at home—for the hot days—for the children—for evening refreshments—wherever anyone wants a cooling, healthful drink.

Be sure to include a bottle of "Montserrat" in your picnic supplies.

Look for the "Montgerrat" Window Display in the stores of your favorite dealers.

It is estimated that, up to the present, more than 12,000,000 deaths have resulted from the greatest and worst of influenza epidemics.

An appalling death roll to be sure, but although the number of cases has been so gigantic, the percentage of deaths is not estimated to be more than seven or eight per cent. It must also be borne in mind that white races suffer less than black.

Fifty per cent of the inhabitants of northern Labrador perished during the winter from an epidemic of "flu." One village, with a population of over 200, was wiped out, while at another—Hebron—only a few of the 200 inhabitants were left to tend the sick and dispose of the bodies of the dead, medical aid being unobtainable.

In some South African kraals the deaths have numbered forty per cent of the cases. In England they are hardly three per cent.

The greatest mortality from any disease at the present time is from cholera, of which there is an epidemic in Bombay. One in every two cases is fatal.

Smallpox among unvaccinated races is deadly in forty cases in a hundred. In Samoa smallpox broke out in the village of Hapaa, and killed 100 out of 400. It was followed by tuberculosis, and at the end of twelve months there were only two survivors left.

In the Pacific Islands measles is terribly destructive, whilst in Madagascar, during a recent epidemic, thirty per cent of those who caught measles died.

At its worst, scarlet fever kills ten per cent. Typhoid fever is much less to be feared nowadays than was the case twenty years ago. In the Soudan, in 1884, a very large proportion of our forces contracted it, and thirty-nine per cent of all cases proved fatal. On the Nile, in 1898, when Kitchener smashed the power of the Mahdi, typhoid proved fatal to twenty-eight per hundred, and the average was much the same in the South African War.

The mortality from typhoid is now down to seventeen per cent of cases, but inoculation appears likely to put an end altogether to this much-dreaded disease.
