

THE WOMAN AND THE PRINCE IN THE CASE

The other day the British world was startled by the action of the Maharajah Gokhwar of Baroda, who, contrary to all precedents of royal loyalty, turned his back on King George when he was receiving the allegiance of the princes of India. Later he apologized. It is stated in some quarters that the cause of it was the little woman standing beside the ship's railing in the picture. She is the Princess Lidra of Baroda, and in the picture she is on her way to India to marry the Indian prince whose picture is shown in the oval—the Maharajah Gokhwar of Baroda. She is well educated, possessing several English university degrees, but becoming the wife of Gwalior she shows the veritable slavery which is the inevitable lot of women of her caste. Their wedding was to have taken place during the durbar festivities, and Their Majesties were invited to the nuptials, but declined to go. The story goes that it was because of the king's refusal to go to the wedding that Gokhwar became fidgety and showed disloyalty.
