ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS

By Olive Roberts Barton

CUTIE COTTONTAIL DISAPPEARS.

"Are you looking for somebody?"

"Please give me half a pound of lard," said Cutie Cottontail one day, bursting into Mister Bags' store in the woods, and pushing the door open so hard that it went tingling for five minutes nearly.

"You get it, Nick," said Mister Bags, "And put it into one of those little wooden things, will you," panted Cutie. You know—like a little boat."

"All right," said Nick, wondering why Cutie was so particular. "But run straight home with it, for it's a warm day and it will melt."

Nick measured out the lard and wrapped it up and gave it to Cutie and away the little rabbit boy went like the wind.

"I wonder what he is in such a hurry for," laughed Mister Bags. "Pickles and porcupines! It's the first time in all my life I ever saw that youngster move like that, except one day when Wasp Weasel chased him."

Everything in the store went on as usual after that. Mrs. Chipmunk

FABLES ON HEALTH

Bedtime Hours

Mr. Mann soon found out that every one, or pretty nearly everyone, has upon his hands a tough problem in getting the child to bed at a certain time.

The child will, if he can get away with it, try to stay up as long as his elders. And, if encouraged, this can become a dangerous and unhealthy habit. Don't encourage it in the first place.

Some resort to "get-to-bed" games. But the more efficient get the child in the habit of wanting to go to bed. Children can be trained to go to sleep as soon as they go to bed. Disturbed sleep courts troublesome children.

Try and have a dark, and reasonably quiet bedroom. Also the child should be made acquainted with house noises, so that tip-toed walking and talking in reasonable tone of voice will not disturb it. Such normal noises should not disturb the healthy sleep of the child.

Try to avoid exciting play and romping before the child retires. This will leave the child too excited for sleep, oftentimes. Also parents now know that rocking and lullaby singing are not necessary.

Don't resort to any artificial means, if it is possible.

The healthy child will want to sleep and will enjoy it. Any tricks or devices merely get the child into other habits. Avoid them.

It's a great food to keep kids whistlin'—and how they do put it away!

Nourishing and delicious—and doesn't tax digestion either.

Kellogg's CORN FLAKES

came in to buy some moth-balls to put away her winter clothes, and Mrs. Groundhog wanted some tender flannel for flannel cakes, and Daddy Cracknuts came in for some tobacco for his pipe, and Mrs. Owl telephoned for an order of groceries, and no one had time to think any more about Cutie and his lard, until the telephone went "tinglingaling," and when Nancy answered it, it was Cutie's mother.

"Did Cutie go to the store for some lard about an hour ago?" she asked.

"Yes, ma'am," said Nancy. "And he was in an awful hurry. He hardly gave Nick time to wrap it up. He just grabbed it and ran."

"Well, he didn't run home," said Mrs. Cottontail. "And neither did the lard, although, as it's such a warm day, it's probably nothing but grease by this time, and running over everything else. I'm making doughnuts and I need it. I wonder where that little rascal is!"

"We're not very busy just now," said Nancy. "Nick and I can go and hunt for him if you like. Maybe he has stopped to play."

"Like as not," said Mrs. Cottontail severely. "I'll be much obliged if you do."

Off started the Twins, and they looked and looked and looked for Cutie Cottontail. But nary a hair of him could they see anywhere. It seemed as though the earth must have opened up and swallowed him.

"I wonder if Wasp Weasel—" began

Nancy, a dreadful thought coming into her mind.

"There's something. What's that?" They had come to the edge of the creek and there lay the lard on the bank draped in a large green leaf. But no Cutie, and no paper, and no little wooden holder!

"What do you suppose can have happened to him?" she cried. "Cutie, oh, Cutie. Where are you?"

"Are you looking for somebody?" he asked. "If it happens to be Cutie Cottontail, I saw him sailing off in a boat two hours ago."

Nick knew now why Cutie was so anxious to have the lard in a wooden thing "shaped like a boat."

LOOPING THE LOOP RECORD SMASHED

Paris, May 27.—Madame Adrienne Bolland, the aviatrix, started at 4:19 o'clock this afternoon in an attempt to beat the record for looping the loop. She descended at 5:23 o'clock after having looped the loop 212 times, beating her own record for women of 98 loops established on Oct. 18 last. Frontal, the French aviator, holds the men's record with 982 loops.

2 MONTHS GIVEN AS OPEN SEASON AT PORT NELSON

D. W. McLaughlin Says Tramp Steamers Would Prefer Montreal

Ottawa, May 27.—That the Hudson Bay route had little chance of being able to compete with the present Lake and rail route for export grain, is the opinion expressed by D. W. McLaughlin, engineer in charge of the dredging operations at Port Nelson, in a report to the Department of Railways made in September, 1917.

The report which has not before been made public, was tabled in the House of Commons today with a file of correspondence.

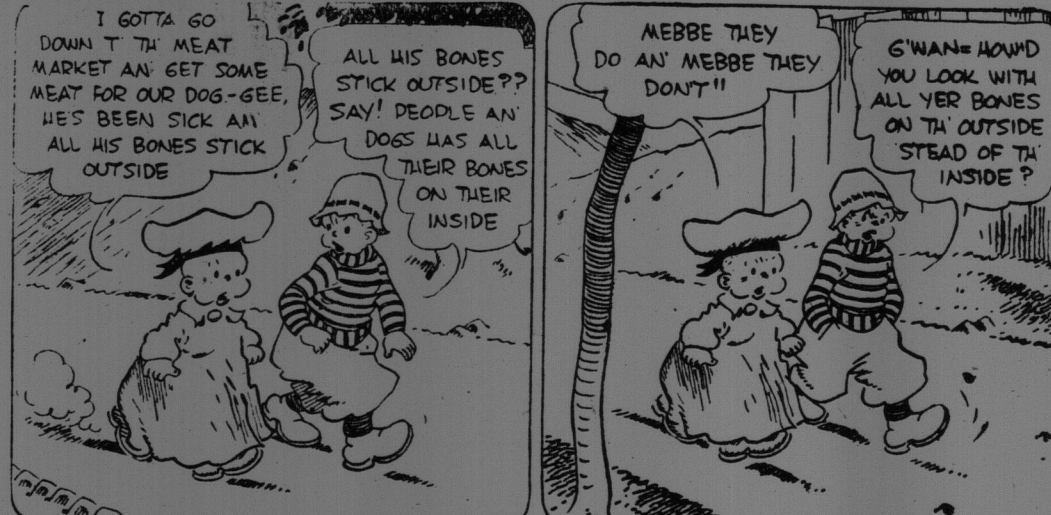

Mr. McLaughlin estimates the average season of navigation into Port Nelson at two months; that is between the actual docking of the first ship and the departure of the last. He submitted an estimate he had based on the rates at that day showing that the rate on grain from Saskatoon to Liverpool, via Port William and Montreal was 26.4 cents per bushel. It would have cost 19.9 per bushel to haul the grain from Saskatoon to Port Nelson including handling charges, leaving a margin of 6.5 for the ocean rate, extra insurance and interest on the cost of work. The average rates obtained by tramp steamers carrying grain from Montreal to Liverpool was seven cents. The engineer points out that tramp steamers would inevitably choose the Montreal route unless there was a considerably higher margin to induce them to go to Port Nelson. Liners, he says, could never successfully run into Port Nelson nor could package freight be handled in large quantities.

Mr. McLaughlin was of the opinion that it would always cost twice as much to handle cargoes at Port Nelson as it would at Port William or Montreal.

GOVERNMENT PLAN TO INSPECT BANKS

Will Submit Proposal For Supervision to Commons Committee

Ottawa, May 27.—The Government has decided that there should be some system of inspection of banks under the Finance Department and will shortly submit a proposal along these lines to the banking and commerce committee of the House of Commons.

This announcement was made to the committee this morning by Hon. James A. Robb, acting Minister of Finance. The Government was eager to establish a system which would permit the inspection of a bank without disturbing the confidence of the public in that institution, Mr. Robb said.
