

Religious Training.—Moral culture must not be ignored in the sublime work of education. Not only must the intellect be trained to think and judge correctly, but also the will and heart must be formed to act according to the dictates of reason and revelation. A man is bound by natural and voluntary obligations towards his Creator, himself, and his fellow-men. He must know these obligations in order to fulfil them. Hence the necessity of studying fundamental principles of religion for the harmonious development and perfection of man, who is rational, free and responsible for his acts.
